Scituate seeking legal grounds to launch suit

By Liz Lawrence and Alice Coyle
STAFF WRITERS

Scituate Selectmen voted unanimously this week to authorize a record review of all documents pertaining to the Greenbush rail restoration project, a move that could lead to another lawsuit against the T.

And if Cohasset wants to get onboard Scituate selectmen chairman Ralph Crossen said a joint suit could be worth pursuing.

Both towns are still reeling from the MBTA's decision to pull its mitigation packages off the table and stop train talks. Scituate's vote follows a stern letter Crossen sent to state Secretary of Transportation Kevin Sullivan last week informing state transportation planners that Scituate won't be ignored when it comes to mitigating rail impacts.

"We are not doing it to make them talk. We are doing it because the lack of good faith on the part of the MBTA in dealing with Scituate on as far as mitigation is concerned."
—Scituate Selectmen Chairman Ralph Crossen

State transportation officials deny that talks have ceased with any Greenbush community.

Jon Carlisle, a spokesman for Sullivan, said a response to Crossen's letter is forthcoming and he maintained that there has been a

Newtonville residents seek town help with drainage problems

By Rick Collins
STAFF WRITER

Residents in the Newtonville section are pleading with town officials to help them address long-existing drainage problems.

The neighbors claim the leveling off of the front yard at 30 Atlantic Avenue last fall has exacerbated the problems.

The yard belonging to David and Frances Burnham was raised by as much as two feet in some areas last fall in an attempt to alleviate chronic flooding problems the couple's house and yard had experienced since they moved to Cohasset in 1976. However, by raising the topography of the property, water that normally drained across the yard into abutting wetlands, has become trapped in the yard of 26 Atlantic Ave., owned by Andrew and Virginia Norman.

The area's chronic flooding and drainage problems has long been an issue. Frances Burnham said since she moved into the house, she discovered that her yard was one of the lowest points in the neighborhood. Burnham said that illegal berms and drainage pipes installed by neighbors had for years directed waste water onto her property. She recalled times her house was flooded with water and sewerage.

Burnham said she had approached her neighbors a number of times about conspiring to solve the drainage and flooding problems, but was rebuffed. In a last-ditch effort, the Burnhams trucked in dirt and leveled their property with the bordering road, and installed two drains to divert water off their property and into the bordering wetlands.

But now their neighbors, the Normans, claim water that used to run through their property on to the Burnhams, now stops at the berm dividing the properties. The result, according to a letter the Normans sent to selectmen and the town's conservation commission, has been a six-month-old standing pool of water that has reached depths of two feet in some spots, and, according to Virginia Burnham, has turned her backyard into a wetland.

Work on town's open space plan gets underway

By Rick Collins
STAFF WRITER

The Cohasset Open Space Advisory Committee is once again at work, planning out the future of the town's open space and recreational areas for the next five years. The seven-member committee headed by Deborah Cook, recently conducted a town-wide survey asking residents their opinions on the current status of recreational opportunities, open space and conservation lands in the town. The survey also sought out residents' thoughts on the future of open space in the town.

According to Cook, the committee received 500 responses to the survey. "The response was fabulous, we're really, really pleased" she said.

The committee is currently breaking down the results and cataloging the written responses in order to start the task of writing a master plan. Cook said the group will start analyzing the responses at its next meeting in July, in order to begin preparing the open space report when it becomes due to the state Department of South Main Street yard named a wildlife habitat

In an era where landscaping beauty is often defined by who has the greenest lawn or the most colorful flower beds — the Canneys have crafted their backyard into a sanctuary for local animals and plants.

The Canneys, who live on South Main Street, were recently recognized for their efforts by being designated a "Backyard Wildlife Habitat" by the National Wildlife Federation, a member-supported conservation group founded in 1936.

Counsel raises rate

Town Manager Mark Haddad was recently notified by town counsel Paul R. DeRensis that his hourly rate will be rising from $140 to $150 due to his firm's rising costs.

DeRensis said in a letter that the standard hourly fee charged to clients by his Deutsch Williams Brooks DeRensis Holland & Drachman, P.C. firm is anywhere from $200 an hour to $450.

He also said he will requesting a $500 a month raise in retainer fees. Cohasset currently spends $4,000 a month on retainer fees. DeRensis said that if he had billed the town by the hour, the average cost per month would have been more than $6,300. Under the new hourly rate, the bill would've been more than $6,800 a month.

The actual amount of money the town spends on attorney's fees is much greater than the $48,000 it spends for a retainer, which doesn't cover any litigation costs. The town is expected to spend more than $200,000 in FY 2000 for counsel fees.

Police promote car safety

The Cohasset Police Department has announced two new programs as part of the state's "Watch Your Car" program.

Police are now performing VIN etching free of charge. An automobile's VIN numbers are permanently etched onto a vehicle's glass. Vehicles with this theft deterrent device are eligible for a 15 percent discount on insurance.

Officer Rick Yocum said that Cohasset residents interested in having the service done, should call him, and make sure he is around as he is the only officer trained in the procedure at the moment.

Yocum also said that automobile owners can obtain a "Watch Your Car" decal that signifies the car is not normally driven between 1 a.m. and 5 p.m. It permits police to stop the vehicle between those hours and check the identity of the driver of the vehicle.

For more information, contact the Cohasset Police at 383-1212.

Beach, RTF permits

Your beach and RTF permits are expiring. You will need vehicle registrations, or if not, a Massachusetts registration, proof of residency (tax bill or rental lease). You are encouraged to purchase your sticker through the mail by providing a copy of your registration and a self-addressed return envelope.

Stickers are on sale at the town hall have the following schedule. Monday, Wednesday and Thursday 10 a.m. to 2 p.m.; Tuesday evening 5 to 7 p.m. and Friday 10 a.m. to 1 p.m. Stickers will be on sale at the DPW building Monday-Friday from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. and on the weekends from 7:30 a.m. - 3:30 p.m. Beach stickers are $7 per vehicle, and $3 per vehicle for elders over 60. RTF stickers are $100 per family, for senior citizens 65 and over will be $65 and for a single resident $50.

Permits now being issued will expire on May 31, 2001.

Time for walk-ins

Selectmen set aside 10 minutes early in their meetings, usually at 7:40 p.m., to address any concerns from members of the public who have issues that are not on the agenda.

If the matter cannot be handled briefly, it will be placed on a future agenda. Call Town Manager Mark Haddad at 383-4105 for more information. Selectmen's meetings start at 7:30 p.m. and are held on alternate Tuesdays.

The next selectmen's meeting is Tuesday, July 11.

Beechwood Cemetery graves are available

Gravesites at the Beechwood Cemetery are now available for purchase on a pre-need basis to residents and former residents who resided in Cohasset for a period of one continuous year.

The cost per grave is $725 for residents and $1,000 for former residents. Grave purchases are limited to two gravesites in any cemetery under the jurisdiction of the Town of Cohasset.

Anyone wishing to inquire about purchasing graves should contact the D.P.W. office either in person or by phone, 383-0273.

Honoring Dad

Cohasset teen top money raiser in Relay For Life

By Rick Collins
STAFF WRITER

Somewhere, Jeff Garber's father must be smiling.

Not only has the Cohasset teen raised more than $7,000 in the past three years for the American Cancer Society's annual Relay For Life fundraiser, he twice has won awards for his efforts.

This past Monday, Jeff, 15, was named the Cohasset relay's top overall money raiser, after bringing in $4,072 for the June 9-10 event. In 1998, the year his father, Gary, died from a brain tumor, Jeff was the top student fund-raiser with $1,069 in pledges.

"It's like acknowledging that I really helped," said the incoming Cohasset High School junior.

Jeff first participated in the event four years ago, a year after his father first did, because he wanted to "help out."

He said he didn't really try to raise a large amount of money in 1997, the same year his father spoke at the event about living with cancer. But that changed after his dad died.

"The next three years I really tried raising money in memory of him," he said.

Jeff, a member of the school's tennis team, said he normally starts going door-to-door in Cohasset about a month before the event, whenever he finds time after practice. He said his interest in pounding the pavement and knocking on doors doesn't fizzle out, saying, "this is something I really want to do." This year his fund-raising effort was helped out by the promise of matching funds by a friend's company.

He also co-captained the Mass. Cancer Crusaders at this year's Relay along with friends Courtney Anton and Tim Baird. The team of 12 raised a total of $4,717 for the American Cancer Society. His father's friends also walked in his honor on the team G-Force. The Cohasset event raised a remarkable $103,000, easily surpassing the event's goal of $90,000.

Jeff Garber is all smiles after learning how much money he has raised in the American Cancer Society's Relay for Life events.

The most emotional part of the event came during the luminary, when Cohasset High School was lit up by more than 3,000 candles in memory of friends and family who were cancer victims.

Jeff knows the money he raises won't single handedly provide a cure for cancer, but he instead hopes that it can help provide a hotel room for a family to be closer to a patient undergoing treatment, or some other services. In fact, more than 21 percent of the money raised by the American Cancer Society goes toward patient support such as literature, counseling services and awareness programs. Twenty percent of the money is used for cancer research and 3.6 percent pays for the organization's management.

"I'm very proud of him," said Helene, mother of Jeff and his two sisters, Rachel, 13, and Karen, 11. "It's just too bad he had to get involved the way he did."

Candidates: community roots, service will count in election

Editor's note: This is one story in an ongoing series of articles looking at the candidates for the Third Plymouth District and the issues.

By Rick Collins
STAFF WRITER

Though more than two months remain before the state's primary elections, the candidates hoping to replace State Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray, R-Cohasset, have been canvassing the district, talking to residents and getting a basic feel for the issues that affect voters in Cohasset, Hingham and Hull.

Murray, who is retiring after 23 years of representing the 3rd Plymouth District, will leave a legacy of constituent service and focus on local affairs which all three candidates say they will continue to build on. Democrats Michael Holden and Garrett Bradley, both of Hingham, and Republican Mary Anne McKenna, also from Hingham, all recently emphasized the local approach to running for an office on Beacon Hill. All three candidates pointed to their service to the community as reasons area voters should consider voting for them.

Holden is the only one of the candidates to hold public office, but Bradley said he is no less of a qualified candidate. Bradley cites his experience as an assistant district attorney, his time spent volunteering on organizations such as Hingham's playground committee, the town's capital outlay committee and his time spent coaching youth football. He said the combined experiences gave him an opportunity to meet many families within the district and helped him identify the issues affecting them.

"I think that voters should vote for me because I have the widest range of experience and am the best prepared," he said.

Mary Anne McKenna points to her 20 years of community volunteer work with a wide range of groups in the area. "All of the volunteer work that I have done during the past years was accomplished without an eye toward holding public office. It was borne of a deep-seeded desire to serve," she said in a prepared statement.

"All of us can say we have experience, but what should be emphasized is relevant involvement," said Mike Holden. He said voting for a state representative is similar to hiring someone for an important job.

"I believe that my strength is when people look at my resume, they see experience in government, business experience and general life experience...That's what stands out. I have a proven record, there's a resume there."

Holden was a Hingham selectman from 1997 until this year, and was chairman of the board last year. He has also spent time on the board of health and is the current vice chairman of the housing partnership committee. He also makes up the Holden in the Hingham law firm Holden & Feeney.

All three candidates identified similar issues as main concerns of local residents.

Holden said he has been walking through the district for the past eight months and that residents have asked him about health care, area transportation issues and tax relief, but that he has fielded the most questions on Greenbush. "That may or may not be surprising, what with the state of health care, education reform and special education reform...The majority of people ask, 'Where are you on Greenbush?'"

Bradley said he has been focusing on health care and tax relief, as well as quality of life issues such as the air base redesign and air traffic issues. He said he is against the access road from Routes 3 and 228 and would rather see a "high tech medical facility" go into the base bringing high-paying jobs to the area, instead of $7 of $8 an hour jobs. (see separate story in this issue on redevelopment plans for naval base.)

McKenna said the issues important to her include protecting the area's character, education, affordable prescription drugs for the elderly and maintaining quality of life standards. She sees the job of state representative as being a uniter not a divider by saying "I see my role as building relationships and getting people to understand each other so that an optimum result can be achieved.

"I believe there are solutions to meet everyone's concerns and that compromise can be achieved with proper guidance from an effective state representative."

AROUND TOWN

HELLO COHASSET!

I want to start the column this week by wishing everyone a very happy, fun-filled July 4th holiday! Please remember to stay safe with all the outdoor activities and enjoy all the celebrations that are happening all over the place.

CONGRATULATIONS

Congratulations are in order this week to a very special couple! Captain Steven Borland and his new wife, Julie (Litchfield) Borland were married on Sunday, June 25. We had a wonderful time celebrating the start of there new life together with the ceremony being held at St. Anthony's and then a gala reception was held at the Pembroke Country Club. Julie looked stunning and so happy and Steven was so handsome and the two of them never stopped smiling! An after party was held at the home of Julie's father, Harold where more celebrating took place. Julie and Steven are in Ireland on a wonderful two-week honeymoon. Congratulations you two! We love you guys.

WELCOME, VISITORS

We have a wonderful family here visiting from from Ireland this week. Alan, Linda, Emma and Jenny O'Reilly are back for a visit after living here for two years on Fernway. We hope you all have a wonderful time while you are here and look forward to next year for another visit!

COLLEGE NEWS

We have some more college news to report from a number of different schools.

Hamilton College, a highly selective residential college, which offers its students a rigorous, liberal arts curriculum honored a young, Cohasset student at the conclusion of this year. Stephen Kovach, the son of Mr. and Mrs. George S. Kovach Jr. of Ripley Road, was a member of the 2000 Hamilton College men's lacrosse team, which finished the year with a 6-10 record. Stephen is currently a sophomore at the school. Great Job, Stephen!

We also had some more great news from Plymouth State College in New Hampshire. Katherine Anderson and Matthew Keefe were both named to the Dean's List for the Spring Semester. In order to be eligible for this honor, students must have attempted at least 12 credit hours during the semester. This is wonderful news you two, keep up the great work.

Bucknell University in Lewisburg, Penn., also sent some super news. Stephanie G. Lubitz, daughter of Kyle and Edward Lubitz, received a BA in English in a graduation ceremony held on May 21. Great Job, Stephanie!

We also had news given to us about a wonderful young man, John R. Campbell. John graduated from U Mass, Lowell with a BS in Health Education. What a wonderful field to be entering into, John. Good luck with all your future plans.

Lindsay Feig, '04, of Cohasset plays Violet in Thayer Academy Middle School's production of "You're a Good Man, Charlie Brown."

GOOD WORK

I received a fax from Carol Riley here in town. Last week, Brian Riley, a recent Dean's List graduate of Providence College, shot a hole in one on the 15th hole at Hatherly Golf Club, with Greg Stevens, a graduate of Assumption College as a witness. Both boys are Cohasset High School Class of 1996 graduates. Congratulations to both of you!

HAPPY 60TH, ANDY

I also received an email this week from Linda Ash. Linda wanted us to help wish Andy a big, huge Happy Birthday! Andy celebrated the big 60 this past weekend with his family at his favorite restaurant for a pizza party! Happy Birthday Andy! Also celebrating a special birthday in the Ash family, was Lawrence Ash, who turned 8 on Wednesday. Lawrence was going on a fun-filled trip to Six Flags with his family to help ring in this special day! We all hope that you had a great time, Lawrence!

SPECIAL THOUGHTS

I would like to take this opportunity to ask all of you to remember the many people here in town who are recovering from surgeries, illness and sadness from recent events. Until I get the actual requests, I cannot mention anyone in particular, but know that we think about them often. To all of you out there, we want to send get-well wishes and all our sympathies to those dealing with serious illness and personal issues within your families.

SILVIA WILL BE MISSED

Cohasset lost a wonderful person last weekend from our town. Mr. Jack Silvia passed away and we want to take this time to remember him and all of his memories that he left for his family and friends. To the whole Silvia family, please accept our sympathies on the loss of this amazing man and know that we are with you at your time of sadness.

Please continue to send all your news to me each week. I am looking for vacation plans and news, births, birthdays and any other "Around Town" going-on. Next week should be a great one for all, let me know how you spent your 4th of July holiday!

Newtonville residents ask town for help with drainage problems

"Water from nine properties have pooled into a large lake where the front yard used to be," she said. "For six months my children haven't been able to use their trampoline…They don't have a yard to play in."

She also said the standing water has encouraged the already bad mosquito population.

"I don't know what to do. It's a very difficult situation."

The Normans have sent two letters to the board of selectmen, including one signed by 16 of their neighbors, asking for the town to step in and help mediate a solution.

One neighbor said he has never seen the flooding problem as bad as it is now.

STAFF PHOTO/RICK COLLINS

The recently leveled land at 30 Atlantic Ave. has formed a berm to neighboring 26 Atlantic Ave. causing flooding problems.

Andrew Norman said at the very least the town should want to take interest in the problem because, according to him, excess water has been flooding Newton Road, a private way that the town has access to.

"The right of way is regularly flooded," he said, adding that the water is an impediment for emergency vehicles creating a public safety hazard.

"All the neighbors are looking for is a solution," he said. "We have nowhere to go to resolve these problems. We're looking for some kind of guidance."

Burnham sings a similar song as the Normans. "This really is a municipal problem," she said. Burham suggested that an aqueduct be built from in front of her driveway, which is where the flooding begins, through the hill in Newton Road and out to Atlantic Avenue.

Burnham said she is not diverting the water drainage, instead just preventing her neighbors wastewater from running onto her property, much to the chagrin of the Normans.

Andrew Norman said he at least wants the town and other residents to realize that this problem could happen to them. Along as a person's property is not within 100 feet of a wetland, the conservation committee has no jurisdiction over it, said Sue Cope, chairman of the conservation committee.

"There's no bylaw preventing this from happening on other properties in town," said Norman. "You need a permit to install a fence but someone can haul in tons of earth and flood your property."

Selectmen are expected to discuss the issue at a meeting July 9.

Town's open space master plan is underway

Environmental Affairs in June, 2001.

Cohasset residents might not be able to enjoy the Turkey Hill recreational area if it wasn't for the town's original open space master plan, written in 1996. Conservation commissioner Sue Cope headed up the effort, which produced the first official open space master plan for Cohasset. Two previous attempts of establishing master plans in 1961 and 1970 were not approved by the town.

Cope found that 1/3 of Cohasset's total acreage is protected open space. This protected land includes Wompatuck State Park, Whitney and Thayer woods, and the Bancroft bird sanctuary. This doesn't include the close to 200 acres of open recreational space, including 35 acres of school property, the two-acre Hagerty property, 5.7 acres next to Straits Pond and 144 acres of scattered wetlands throughout the town.

Some of the objectives realized in the original plan was the protection of Lily Pond and sewer installation around the area to protect the public water supply and the purchase of Turkey Hill. Access to the waterfront and a walking and biking path along the harbor were also mentioned in the open space plan.

Cope said that the state has a series of criteria before awarding grants for open space land purchases, one of which is an updated master plan. The $450,000 grant that was eventually awarded by the state, along with contributions by private sources, helped Cohasset and Hingham jointly purchase the 50-acre parcel of undeveloped land at Turkey Hill, which is now managed by the Trustees of Reservations.

Cook said the group hasn't really started with the project's objectives and has mostly focused on updating old sections of the prior plan. She said members of the committee have thrown out ideas to think about, such as creating a brochure on how to donate land to the town; creating a matrix to help prioritize land for acquisition; creating a master map of all recreational facilities in the town; and encouraging town residents to think about their own land management. "We might try to encourage people to think about their property so that they don't have huge areas of grass, to let it become more of a natural state," she said, "try to get them away from lawn care products that we are discovering are bad or the environment."

She said the committee should have a better idea of possible objectives after its July meeting.

Cook said one difference between this committee and the previous one is that she expects the current committee to remain working after the master plan is completed. She said some of the town's boards had forgotten about the previous master plan and its goals and objectives. "Ideally, this committee should always be active," she said. "We spend a couple of months writing the plan but we need to stay active and drive these projects."

Cope said that "there is always a big push to get the plan done" but added that in once the 1996 plan was finished, the energy level of the group dropped leaving some goals unrealized.

Cook realizes that the amount of time people have to give to these projects is limited and hopes that more residents will come forward and help ensure the committee's work goes to waste.

"We're welcoming people who want to work on any projects," she said. "If someone has a goal or objective they want to take ownership on, we'll be glad to work with them."

If anyone is interested in volunteering on the Open Space Advisory Committee, Cook can be reached at home at 383-6313.

OPINION

EDITORIAL

Clock is ticking for reuse plan

Life is about timing.

Whether it's finding the right mate, landing the perfect job or securing your dream house.

And the old adage, "timing is everything" never seemed more fitting than at this critical stage in the redevelopment plans of the Weymouth Naval Air Station.

The next six months will prove to be the most crucial as the South Shore Tri-Town Development Corp. works out the details for the Mills Corp. to purchase 155 acres of base land for an outlet mall. The June 15 deal hashed out between the two parties now paves the way for the six-month planning process where everything will be put on the table for negotiation.

Creating the mall is just one part of a multi-phase plan to redevelop the now-abandoned air station which straddles Weymouth, Abington and Rockland. Additional plans call for, among other things:

An 18-hole golf course

Utilizing 758 acres for open space and recreation, including 46 acres of land with landscaping and ponds.

Building up to 700 units of senior citizen housing.

There is no doubt this plan, and any others that may be floated in the months ahead, will have a huge impact not only on its three neighboring towns, but the entire South Shore. Meetings, dialogues and debates over the next several months will only be as successful and lively as those who participate.

So far, the redevelopment plans have been met with mixed reaction, to say the least. An organized and vocal citizens group, COMPARE (Citizens Opposing the Mall and Proposed Access Road and Extension), has led the discussions and debate with the tri-town board. But there clearly are many viewpoints out there. We've heard from people who favor the redevelopment plans, portions of it, or other alternative uses.

There has even been talk that the federal government could use the land as a penitentiary or the state could use it as a runway for Logan Airport.

It must be remembered that any change in the reuse plan must be approved by town meetings in Rockland and Abington and the town council in Weymouth.

One thing is clear amid all the debate and ensuing rancor: something will be done with the 1,450 acres of land at the base. And its future depends on how much participation and support there is from South Shore residents. Contrary to many opinions, the Mills Corp proposal is not a done deal. That's what the next six months are about. As the process unfolds, residents will have ample opportunities to voice their concerns, questions and show their support for the uses being planned. It's also the time to get alternatives on the table. COMPARE has so far been adamant and vocal about its opposition to the redevelopment plans but has yet to offer concrete and viable options for the land's use.

One thing people have to ask themselves in the months ahead: if not this plan promoted by the Tri-Town Development board then what else? It is clear this land will not be kept solely for open space purposes. The South Shore needs the economic boost revitalization of the base will afford. For example, some 5,000 new jobs will be created by the mall plan itself, not counting the hundreds of construction jobs which will be available.

Many opponents have never accepted the fact that there a timeframe attached to redeveloping the land. The towns have the options now, but if the land were to be turned over to the state it is almost a guarantee there will be little to no public input sought on plans. A federal prison or new Logan runway could come barreling down, like it or not.

We urge residents from all towns on the South Shore to get involved now. Help chart the course and lead the discussion about what to do with one of the last largest tracts of land on the South Shore. In the weeks and months ahead, we encourage attendance at meetings and welcome residents using our newspaper and website as a means to articulate their concerns and questions.

Residents are welcome to go to our website at www.townonline.com/south and log their concerns on our bulletin board set up expressly to air views on the redevelopment plan. Our website will also be hosting a poll in the coming weeks so we can gauge public input on the issue. In the weeks ahead we also hope to host an online chat with the various parties involved in the redevelopment plan. We continue to urge residents to write letters to the editor. Utilizing both print and online will help drive the discussion and make it clear to officials where the South Shore stands.

Don't let the clock run out and then bemoan what has become of the former Naval Air Station. We can all be a part of the solution.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Tell it like it is

TO THE EDITOR:

At the May meeting to announce the Selectmen's signing of the MBTA letter of understanding, Terry Fancher, representing the South Shore Chamber of Commerce, stated that the main reason for supporting Greenbush was to "reduce traffic on 3A."

Either Mr. Fancher is naive or he hasn't studied his traffic flow models, which, if anything, suggest that traffic on 3A will actually get worse over the long haul if Greenbush should ever become a reality.

The dynamics of traffic congestion revolve around the issue of critical mass. Those who commute on Route 3A know the routine well. During peak periods of congestion they use their imagination and find any number of ways around the bottlenecks. They leave earlier or later or they sneak around through back streets. Given this dynamic, which has been documented in many traffic models, congestion would quickly be restored to present-day critical mass as commuters seek the path of least resistance.

The truth is that South Shore Chamber of Commerce comments about traffic congestion are only a façade to make it appear that their support of Greenbush is driven by their concerns for the plight of residents who must suffer the commute into Boston every day. In fact, the Chamber supports Greenbush for one reason and one reason only and that is "economic development."

Were Greenbush to happen, the scenario would go something like this:

Without question, the lack of commuter rail service has been a major contributing factor to the relatively lower real estate values on the South Shore when compared to the North and West of Boston. And there is little doubt that Greenbush would change this equation, but not in ways that would benefit South Shore residents.

Consider, for example, the future home-buyer who is waiting in the wings to move to the South Shore who places commuting convenience over the relative pastoral tranquility we enjoy today (there are more of them then there are of us). With restored rail they will most assuredly move here and their influx will shift our community sensitivities irrevocably. Coming from communities closer to Boston, with an omnipresent din of traffic noise, they will see the South Shore, with only 24 heavy diesel locomotives a day as relative peace and quiet. As a result of this influx, real estate prices will increase as will the value of existing homes. And while many residents may enjoy seeing their real estate increase in value, they will not enjoy the resulting tax bill that accompanies such increases. Also, the pressure on those who own much of the green space that we take for granted will be enormous. Over time, as the demand for residential space increases, this land will be sold to developers. With more people come more services in the form of stores and restaurants. Route 3A, from Hingham to Marshfield will soon resemble the endless strip mall of Route 53. And, of course, all these new commercial enterprises will need the kind of representation only the South Shore Chamber of Commerce can provide. Never mind that all this growth will bring much more traffic, both local and on the way to Boston.

This is the economic development scenario that will most assuredly accompany Greenbush. Little wonder that real estate agents and developers and economically driven groups such as the South Shore Chamber of Commerce are the most ardent supporters of restored commuter rail to the area.

So, to Mr. Fancher and the South Shore Chamber of Commerce I say, "spare us the false pretenses about traffic concerns on Rte 3A and tell it like it is."

Every South Shore resident should carefully consider the future ramifications of Greenbush. With restored rail, getting to Boston might be more convenient, but the community we return to would be a far different community than it is today.

Appreciate support of arts

TO THE EDITOR:

On behalf of the students at Cohasset Middle High School and the Arts Boosters, I would like to thank the South Shore Playhouse Associates for its generous grant this year.

We try to use the funds raised for the arts in a judicious way. We help with some extra-curriculum items for the Cohasset Middle High School art teachers to enhance the already rich program. Also, if there is a need which is not included in the school budget, we try to see if we can provide some assistance. We assisted the drama workshop by paying their entry fee to the State Drama Festivals, and we provided some financial assistance with the band and chorus trip to Toronto this spring.

The South Shore Playhouse Associates and the South Shore Music Circus are true assets to the town of Cohasset. The members of the Arts Boosters send our sincerest wishes for the best season yet in 2000.

Donna O'Donnell, President
Cohasset Arts Boosters

Leadership needed on Greenbush issue

TO THE EDITOR:

I was pleased to read Mary Ford's comments on the restoration of the Greenbush line ("Mitigation matters", June 15th).

The issue is no longer who supports Greenbush or if we like the train or not — the issue for leadership today is who is going to do the best job protecting our community. As our State Senator, Bob Hedlund has neither stopped the train from coming nor has he protected our community through mitigation assistance.

Complicating our need for a reasonable voice on the matter is the well-known fact that Hedlund, as a Mayoral candidate for Weymouth, voiced support for the restoration of Greenbush last September. Now that it's election time in Hingham, (Cohasset), and in Scituate, Mr. Hedlund has changed position back and offered a late amendment to de-fund the rail to score some political points with voters. As Selectman Richard Lane has pointed out, Mr. Hedlund has failed to attend even the most elementary mitigation meetings.

Last week's editorial read: "The towns along Greenbush want the best, most mitigated train possible…Time – and delays — translate to higher and higher costs." Not only should the MBTA stop dragging its feet but also so should politicians like Sen. Hedlund.

Election policy

The Mariner encourages submissions from candidates for state and local races in the September and November elections. Throughout the months ahead we will host a candidates forum in our newspaper where candidates are allowed to submit statements of no more than 200 words addressing issues.

The [illegible] basis and may be edited for length and purposes of taste and libel. Readers will be informed that the statements are the views and facts as the candidate sees them.

During the election season we will not accept letters to the editor from candidates or from residents who are writing to endorse a candidate. [illegible] directed to the editor.

In addition to the forum, we will run regular stories on the issues and profiles on the candidates. We encourage readers to provide us with feedback on issues they would like explored in the coming months.

HEALTH NOTES

Town works toward compliance

By Stephen Bobo

Cohasset is well on the way to compliance with EPA's new stormwater rules

Phase II of the EPA's new stormwater rules covering its National Pollution Elimination Discharge System (NPDES) is scheduled be enforced within Cohasset this year1, although larger towns (more than 10, 000 population) may delay enforcement until 2002. Phase II extends EPA rules to smaller municipal sewer systems in 32 communities within the greater Boston region, including Cohasset, Scituate, Hingham, Hull, and a number of other South Shore communities. The new rules call for the creation of a stormwater management plan to protect water quality from our sewer systems and other non point sources of pollution such as storm drains, construction sites, etc. The plan must include six minimum control measures:

Public education and outreach
Public participation and involvement
Illicit discharge detection and elimination
Construction site runoff and control
Post construction runoff control
Pollution prevention/good housekeeping.

Fortunately, the board of health is in the process of our town-wide Wastewater Management Plan to the state. This plan contains provisions covering the new EPA rules.

Cohasset Receives Grant

Moreover, the board has applied for and received a $12,500 grant which covers the costs for developing the EPA required plan.

The town now has the resources to develop a plan as required by the EPA, but, more important, the grant includes money to implement a public outreach program which supports the Cohasset Summer Institute, the popular high school summer program, part of which deals with environmental sciences and water quality monitoring.

The high school-sponsored Summer Institute and Maritime Institute programs will engage as many as 40 students from the high school and others from nearby towns in course credit programs within the town during the summer.

Upper Little Harbor Algae Problem

A wet spring, a building boom and excessive lawn maintenance activity has resulted in one of the largest algae blooms within memory in upper Little Harbor.

In spite of warnings by the South Coastal Watershed's ESL (Environmentally Safe Lawns) team's current lawncare practices continue to degrade the most sensitive areas of Little Harbor. On the basis of a letter recommendation by the board of health on June 22, the conservation commission voted to send a joint letter to all residents bordering Little Harbor informing them about the causes and prevention of algae in that body of water. The problem has been repeatedly studied.

The two most recent reports being in 1991, and 1999 both of which concluded with well documented scientific evidence that nutrients from lawn care products and surface water runoff are the major causes of the algae pollution in Little Harbor. The Health Board letter states that, given the level of algae deposition in upper Little Harbor, it could become a bog within 25 years. Already, residents have reported an infestation of flies, precursors to the midges which infest Musquashicut Pond in Scituate, and Straits Pond in Cohasset.

Text of the BOH letter.

June 22, 2000
Conservation Commission
Dear Colleagues;

I understand that the Concom has received complaints about the algae in Upper Little Harbor. I fear that in some cases, the complainants are also responsible for the algae. The recently completed Little Harbor Study has shown high levels of nutrients in the water of Upper Little Harbor. These are directly the result of fertilizer and chemicals from lawns, as well as other practices such as dumping grass clippings and other debris near this sensitive body of water. Estimates indicate that as much as 50 percent of the nitrates contributing to the eutrophication of water bodies such as Little Harbor come from agricultural treatment. Other causes are failed septic systems, and surface water runoff from impermeable surfaces such as roofs and driveways. The facts are that Upper Little Harbor can tolerate almost no additional nitrogen from fertilizer since the soils which surround it cannot absorb the nutrients from such lawn maintenance practices. If no one fertilized his lawn, the algae would go away.

There is a direct correlation between the over fertilization of lawns adjacent to water bodies and the algae blooms in those water bodies. According to the EPA, between 50 and 90 percent of the fertilizer put on lawns leaches through lawn to the ground water or becomes surface runoff. So called maintenance fertilization recommendations by most lawn care agencies would result in the application of slightly less than a quarter ton of fertilizer per acre. Lawn care specialists adopt this practice as routine, and are a major part of the problem. No nearby water body can withstand such a nutrient load.

It would be particularly useful if the conservation commission sent a letter to those abutting Little Harbor warning of the severe environmental harm caused by the practice of over fertilizing and adding harmful chemicals to the surface water entering our wetlands. In view of the gentrification of the land abutting Little Harbor, (creating increased areas of non permeable surface by enlarging buildings; new driveways, etc.,) if the practice of lawn fertilization is not discontinued, upper Little Harbor will become a bog in about 25 years time. This trend can be stopped if everyone realized that a perfect lawn is not a necessary concomitant to living the good life.

How about the games, too?

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

The big sports news last week was the appointment of a comedian, Dennis Miller, as the third man in the broadcasting booth for ABC's Monday Night Football, made famous by a lawyer, Howard Cosell.

Before that, sports fans were engrossed in the question of whether the taxpayers could be induced into contributing a few million toward building a new Fenway Park for Our Olde Towne Team, the Red Sox.

And before that, the most pressing sports matter at hand were the murder charges brought against Ray Lewis, the Baltimore Ravens star linebacker, and Ray Carruthers, the wide receiver of the Carolina Panthers.

Doesn't anyone keep score anymore?

More and more, it is becoming apparent that the place to read the most important sports news is not the Sporting News, but the Wall Street Journal, TV Guide, and the police blotter.

A few issues ago, USA Today devoted a full page to listing the salaries of 2,000 major league baseball players from Kevin Brown ($15.7 million) down to Pete Schourek ($200,000).

The back pages of the sports section were reserved for the scores of most of the day's fun and games, which used to be the reason the pages were printed in the first place.

I guess they figured the salaries, some of them the equivalent of the gross national product of a Third World country, were of more interest to readers, and maybe they're right.

After all, how can a 12-8 victory by the Anaheim Angels over the Seattle Mariners compete for space with the arrest of Mark Chmura, the Green Bay tight end, for having sex with a teenage girl after a high school prom?

Or with the arrest of the South Shore's very own Kevin Stevens, a onetime 50 goal scorer with the Pittsburgh Penguins, in a cheesy motel with a hooker and enough crack cocaine to keep a whole hockey team high through two overtimes?

Or with the slap on the wrist (a $30,000 fine and a three-game suspension) accorded Bobby Knight, the winning-est basketball coach in the University of Indiana's history, for nearly strangling one of his players in practice?

All winter long, we have been entranced by the continuing saga of John Rocker, the Atlanta Braves pitcher who unloaded a passel of politically incorrect phrases on a Sports Illustrated reporter, who promptly printed them.

Rocker, who was fined $5,000 and suspended for a month, apologized halfheartedly to the gays, unwed mothers, and immigrants he may have offended, but it was not good enough for a press that rode the story for all it was worth.

Sports Illustrated itself, flushed with the long record of success it has had with its annual "swimsuit" issue, published an issue of just girls in (and out of) swimsuits, with nary a box score to be found.

And five pages in another issue of SI (that's "S" for sports) were devoted to a profusely illustrated story of the life and loves of Anna Kournikova, with only a passing mention that she plays tennis for a living.

By the way, who won the last Rose Bowl game, and what was the score?

LIBRARY CORNER

Paul Pratt Memorial Library

Local celebrities

Four Cohasset celebrities join the Paul Pratt Memorial Library children's program this summer for their own personal storytimes on Tuesday evenings beginning June 27 at 7 p.m. with Cohasset Fire Chief, Roger Lincoln. Dr. Steve Golden, Cohasset physician, entertains the crowd on July 18, followed by local fisherman, Pete Flaherty on July 25. The final celebrity reader is Cohasset Police Chief Brian Noonan on Aug. 8. Bring your kids in to meet some of Cohasset's best personalities. These programs are free and open to all Cohasset residents.

Storytelling at the library

Elisa Pearmain performs at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library on Tuesday, July 11, at 7 p.m. as part of the ongoing "Open Books, Open Frontiers" children's summer programs.

Ms. Pearmain is a professional storyteller with 15 years of entertaining audiences from the National Storytelling Festival and First Night Boston, to hundreds of schools and libraries throughout New England. Pearmain trains teachers to use storytelling in the classroom through Leslie College. Her program, "Imagination, the First Frontier" has been customized to fit this year's state program theme. Pearmain's folktales which creatively explore how things came to be, will help children understand and use their own imaginations. Her book, "Doorways to the Soul: 52 Wisdom Tales from Around the World" won a 1998 Storytelling World Honor Award.

Once again this program is free and open to all Cohasset residents.

SENIOR SCENE

Summer senior dates for fun to remember

Upcoming events

Water aerobics will start this week. Twice a week. Call the senior center at 383-9112 for more information. This is the best exercise in town on a hot day.

The upcoming senior picnic at the Abbey is tentatively set for Wednesday, July 12. More news to follow.

We are going to do the Boston Symphony rehearsals again this year; $100 for all four tickets, includes round-trip bus. This event is limited to 15 members, so call in early to reserve a seat 383-9112.

Future dates

The wellness fair will be at the Cohasset Community Center on Sept. 9. There will be booths and food. Keep this date in mind.

Unforgettable You 2000 is coming on Oct. 7 at the Hynes Convention Center in Boston. Raffles, prizes and special guests come and line dance. Tickets go on sale July 1 and will be $10. To order tickets and reserve group tables, call Self Esteem Boston at 617-983-1111.

The Sammy Kaye Orchestra is coming to the South Shore Music Circus.

The senior center will be closed on July 4.

The Coffee Café will be closed for the months of July and August and will be opening up again on Sept. 8.

Preservationist language from the keeper of the National Register

LOOKING BACK

DAVID WADSWORTH

Through the years, a conventional language has evolved describing the process of historical preservation and related efforts to save or renew our nation's historical heritage. From the book "Keeping Time, the History and Theory of Preservation in America," by former keeper of the National Register Prof. William J. Murtagh, the following definitions have been culled:

"Preservation is defined as the act or process of applying measures to sustain the existing form, integrity and material of a building or structure, and the existing form and vegetative cover of a site. It may include initial stabilization work, where necessary, as well as ongoing maintenance of the historic building materials."

"Restoration is defined as the act of accurately recovering the form and details of a property and its setting as it appeared at a particular period of time by means of the removal of later work or by the replacement of missing earlier work."

"Reconstruction is defined as the act or process of reproducing by new construction the exact form and detail of a vanished building, structure, or object, or part thereof, as it appeared at a specific period of time."

"The basic dictum of the professional preservationist, however, is to keep as much of he original fabric as possible. Careful adherence to this concept separates the professional preservationist from the non-professional. Many old buildings are destroyed in the restoration process by the very people whose aim is to do just the opposite — to preserve the building by restoring it."

We should be aware of the dangers of a type of "creeping reconstruction," or near-total progressive replacement of older structures by new materials...

"This brings us to the question of reconstruction. One can think of total reconstruction as a 20th- (or now, 21st-) century model of an earlier building that no longer exists."

"Indeed, the overzealousness of some so-called preservation practitioners to replace original materials sometimes leads to what has been called creeping reconstruction."

We should be aware of the dangers of a type of "creeping reconstruction," or near-total progressive replacement of older structures by new materials (the more the new structure grows the more of the old structure is removed). Even should the replacement of old material not become total, but only close to total, the historical value and significance of a building is diminished nearly to the vanishing point. A new replica building has little of the historical significance of the original building, and easily may become a "non-contributing" item in a National Register District. A newly replicated building, though it may superficially resemble the original, is not the same building. The social and architectural historical value of a building dies with the building when the building is removed, even though a building replacing it is designed to resemble the former one. When the replacement and reconstruction involve major changes, such as great enlargement of some parts of the original building, a "non-contributing" National Register status could be said to be nearly certain.

RECREATION NEWS

Summer schedule

Music Circus registration for Heidi

The Cohasset Recreation Department will hold the Music Circus registrations for "Heidi" on Tuesday, July 11. Music Circus Children's Show registrations will be open to children in the playground program, and the show date for "Heidi" is Thursday, July 27.

Music Circus registrations are held at the recreation office, first floor, town hall. Registrations will be held from 9 a.m. through noon and again from 1 through 7 p.m. All tickets for the Music Circus are $6.

Registrations are held each Tuesday according to the above times, two weeks prior to the actual show date.

Lacrosse clinic

The Cohasset Recreation Department is now taking registrations for a full-contact boy's rules lacrosse clinic the week of July 24 through July 28. The clinic will be for grades 3 to 4 from 7:30 to 8:30 a.m. and grades 5 to 8 from 8:30 to 10 a.m. at Milliken Field. The fee per participant is $42 for grades 3 to 4 and $62 for grades 5 to 8, and checks can be made payable to the town of Cohasset.

Mr. Chuck Jaffee will direct this unique lacrosse opportunity to learn and develop the basic skills and concepts of lacrosse.

Registration forms can be obtained at the recreation office, first floor, Cohasset Town Hall.

Summer Band Concert Series

The Cohasset Recreation Department's first concert on the common for the 2000 season is scheduled for Tuesday evening July 11 at 7:30 on the Cohasset Common.

Performing will be the 30-piece South Shore concert band under the direction of Richard P. Whitmarsh.

Concerts are available via the generosity of the South Shore Playhouse Associates Inc. of Cohasset and a matching-fund grant from the American Federation of Musicians of New York City, N.Y.

Soccer camp registrations

The Cohasset Recreation Department is accepting registrations for VIP Soccer Camp, for children ages 4 to 7.

VIP Soccer Camp offers two programs for boys and girls, ages 4-7. ABC Soccer is especially designed for 4 and 5 year olds and meets from 8 to 9:30 a.m., Monday through Friday, July 24 through July 28. The cost is $50 per week.

Also offered by VIP is a three-hour program, meeting from 9:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m., Monday through Friday, July 24 through July 28, for 6 and 7 year olds. The cost is $80 for the week.

Both VIP programs will be held this year at the Front Field of Cohasset High School. For brochures and registration forms, come to the Cohasset Recreation Department office, first floor, town hall.

Brochures and registration forms are available at the Cohasset Town Hall, recreation department office.

Cohasset festival offers Mediterranean flair

By Lauryn Mittleman
CORRESPONDENT

The posters promised rain or shine and the sun most certainly shone this past weekend as Panagia Greek Orthodox Church's "Taverna 2000: A Taste of Greece" festival proved as entertaining and educational as ever, demonstrating it's never too hot to eat, drink and be merry.

Panagia congregation members bid "Kaloselthate" (or welcome) to guests from all over New England as the annual festival celebrated its twentieth anniversary.

Kicking off Friday evening, the combination of culture and cuisine didn't slow down until the sun set on Jerusalem Road Sunday evening. This time around festival-goers reveled in the authentic sights, sounds and tastes of the Mediterranean, as they toasted "Yia'sou" to old friends while becoming intoxicated by the aroma of lamb on the spit.

"Yes, everyone's definitely eating," stated congregation volunteer Keri Luisi of Braintree while laboring hard over a hot grill midday Sunday.

Again this year event proceeds will benefit the building of Panagia's new Parish and Community Center, and with the exception of a few harried hours Saturday night when a smoking transformer box across the street blew out power and brought fire trucks, Taverna 2000 took place without trouble. (Luckily most of the food had been cooked in advance, explained coordinators, and as the band played on so many in attendance didn't even notice the glitch.)

In Greek the word "Taverna" means outdoor cafe, and this year in particular the festival certainly played the part well, with tables set up by the cool of the pond on the grounds behind the church building. There, a coffee house served up beverages, while debuting this year, background guitar music added to the ambience.

STAFF PHOTOS/ALAN CHAPMAN

Marion Pappas and members of the Greek Orthodox Church participate in a Greek folk dance during the annual Taverna celebration.

"Taverna's are always different each year," explained volunteer Luisi, who has attended the events faithfully for two decades. "Every year it's a different crowd, and people all come for different reasons. Some come for the music, some for the food and so on."

In the shade of the tent patrons admired authentic imported jewelry and other trinkets, while beyond the dance floor beckoned. Live Grecian music came care of DJs, live bands and folk singers, and this time even renowned Greek singer/songwriter Dimitrios Zachos made the trip abroad to join the festivities.

Also newcomers to Taverna, 19 high school students, 2 teachers and one town mayor came all the way from St. John Renti High School in Attica, Greece. Hosted by congregation families, the group additionally traveled to both Haverhill and Hyannis to take part in other local Greek fests.

"They're having a great time," said Father John Maheras before the troupe took to the stage for the final performance Sunday.

Then the ensemble made quite an entrance with their spirited hoots, colorful dress and arms raised high as the audience clapped along in appreciation.

"They were really good and the costumes were pretty," said nine-year-old admirer Kassandra Moskovis when the spectacle ended.

Earlier it had been Kassandra's time to take the spotlight as Panagia's own Children's Dance Troupe also dazzled the crowd. Choreographed by congregation member Marion Pappas, year-to-year the team is a Taverna tour de force, inspiring everyone to give it a whirl.

Finally, after working up an appetite on the dance floor, it was on to what was arguably the day's main attraction.

"The best part is indeed the food," summed up volunteer Tom Zotos of Marshfield. "The generations of people who really know how to cook are few and far between now. The beauty of this is that there's still a few years left of the real thing—the real authentic recipes."

Not only did Taverna boast the best Greek salad this side of the Atlantic, other far-from-average festival fare included mouth-watering mousaka, pastitsio, dolmathes and souvlaki. And that's not to mention the pastries. "One of each please," was an often heard request at the dessert tent, where diples, finikia, and yes baklava was devoured with delight.

"We've had a great turnout and we're very happy with the way things have gone," said Stasia Moskovis of Hanover from the pastry station on Sunday. "Every one has been helping out and the Barker Tavern generously donated the bread. The congregation's "Ladies of the Philoptochos Society" (Friends of the Poor) have also been working hard baking for weeks."

From the looks of it, the congregation's youngest generation were also helping their elders, and getting quite an education in the process.

"I learned how to cook here," said ten-year-old Nancy Theodorou of Hanover from her post at the pastry station Sunday.

Finally, after Taverna-goers got their fix of the flavors from the old world, many visitors then took the time to step inside the century-old Panagia church herself, with guided tours held each afternoon. Illuminated by both the sunlight pouring in and the candles lit in tribute, the building was truly a soothing escape.

So now, party over, it's time to say "Efharisto," or thank you.

"I'd like to thank my assitant Laura Apostolou and Susan Maheras for donating a round trip ticket to Greece," said raffle coordinator Helena Panisis on Tuesday. "I also want to thank Betty Trubia and Nicholas Coutoulas for donating paintings, George Washington Toma the TV set, and Mary Fillon, Jeannie Symropoulos, Sophie Kizini and Frances Fyfe for donating other items."

"Each year, when we have our Taverna, it gives us great joy to see the patronage of so many people who come from near and far," adds Fr. Maheras. "You are so very generous with your support, and for this we are truly grateful."

Ten arrested for motorcycle racing

By Rick Collins
STAFF WRITER

Ten men plead not guilty Monday, on charges of failure to stop for a police officer, driving to endanger and speeding, after leading police on a 15-minute, high-speed chase along the Hull and Cohasset waterfronts Saturday afternoon.

The arrests occurred after Cohasset police officer William Quigley spotted a pack of motorcyclists traveling at 52 miles per hour along Jerusalem Road, shortly after 4 p.m.

According to Quigley's police report, he began following the pack along Jerusalem Road. He said the motorcyclists were traveling at a "very high rate of speed," "taking corners in an extremely dangerous manner," and "forcing pedestrians to run for safety." The motorcyclists then turned down Atlantic Avenue and slowed in front of Sandy Beach. Quigley said he pulled over the leaders and waved for the pack to follow, but the motorcyclists instead turned around and fled back toward Hull.

Officer Christy Tarantino continued the chase north on Atlantic Avenue. The pack sped into Hull, but were stopped by a roadblock consisting of Cohasset, Hull and State police at the intersection of Montoya Road and Atlantic Avenue in Hull.

One motorcyclist attempted to flee, but was found hiding in bushes on Montoya Road.

Ten males were arrested and brought to Cohasset Police Station. Their motorcycles were impounded. Arrested were Gregory Nathan, 22, of Norwood; Brett Starr, 29, of Sharon; Mark Wermers, 23, of Stoughton; Alexander Santarelli, 25, of Norwood; James Young, 21, Alfredo Lopilato, 22, Marc Cerundolo, 29, Mario Marganella, 23, Gabriel Berardi, 26, and Aldo Enrico Marganella, 24, all from Canton.

They will be due back in Hingham District Court in August for a pretrial hearing.

Teens charged with school break-in

Two Cohasset teens have a court hearing this week to answer to charges they broke into the Old Osgood School on the corner of Ripley Road and Sohier Street and vandalized the vacant building.

Cohasset Police were notified of an open door on the Sohier Street side of the school Friday night, shortly after 8:30. Police Officer William Quigley responded to the call and heard voices once inside the building. He called for back-up and saw two males inside the building. According to his report, Quigley ordered the males to get on the ground, but they instead ran out a side door, and fled toward the railroad tracks. Quigley said he found a backpack in the school containing papers with one of the youth's names.

Another office arrived with a third teen in her cruiser, who said that he wasn't inside the building but knew who was.

Police went to home of one of the teen's where he was found hiding in the backyard. The second teen was brought to the police station Saturday morning by his father. The teens, both 16, were charged with nighttime breaking and entering, malicious destruction of property and trespassing. Both teens were released to their parents.

Police promote car safety

The Cohasset Police Department has announced two new programs as part of the state's "Watch Your Car" program.

Police are now performing VIN etching free of charge. An automobile's VIN numbers are permanently etched onto a vehicle's glass. Vehicles with this theft deterrent device are eligible for a 15 percent discount on insurance.

Officer Rick Yocum said that Cohasset residents interested in having the service done, should call him, and make sure he is around as he is the only officer trained in the procedure at the moment.

Yocum also said that automobile owners can obtain a "Watch Your Car" decal that signifies the car is not normally driven between 1 a.m. and 5 p.m. It permits police to stop the vehicle between those hours and check the identity of the driver of the vehicle.

Star of the Week

Legion pitcher Greg O'Keeffe of Cohasset gave a superb effort in the team's tough 7-4 loss to Morrisette. O'Keeffe pitched a 3-hit complete game in the contest and is holding an impressive 1.78 ERA.

Johnston back in the saddle again

Cohasset rider at the top of her game after 22-year break

By Julie Ann Nevero
STAFF WRITER

By the time most athletes reach their 30s, they've already reached their peak.

At 50, Cohasset resident and equestrian athlete Diane Johnston finds that competing gets better with age.

"I just love it. I feel like I'm carrying over the childhood dreams that I never imagined could be possible."
Diane Johnston

Johnston was 10 years old when she began riding and competing but gave it up to go to college. Twenty-two years later, at the age of 40, she got back into it.

"I just love it," she said. "I feel like I'm carrying over the childhood dreams that I never imagined could be possible."

This past winter, Johnston participated in the eight-week Winter Equestrian Festival and captured the top prize.

It was one of many riding competitions she will compete in this year. Johnston just left Tuesday for the five-day "I love New York show" in Lake Placid.

"I never expected to be the grand champion," Johnston said of her Winter Equestrian victory, which

Hanging tough

Cohasset/Scituate team struggling in competitive division

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

After opening the season 6-2, the Cohasset-Scituate Legion team has lost four of its last five games but remains in playoff contention up against some very tough teams.

"[This league] is essentially the All-Star team from each town," said pitcher Greg O'Keeffe of Cohasset. "There are no easy games."

Cohasset lost two straight to Morrisette last week, the second of which was a close game right to the end with a final score of 7-4. Morrisette ran its record to 5-1, and it now seems to be the team to beat in the conference.

"We had Morrisette back-to-back, and that's tough," said coach Scott Arnold. "No one has played poorly, but no one has excelled."

In the 7-4 loss, Cohasset-Scituate held the lead 2-0 going into the fifth inning, but Morrisette's bats came alive to score three and four runs in the sixth and seventh innings.

O'Keeffe pitched well, a complete game, allowing only three earned runs.

He's been strong all season with a sensational ERA of 1.78.

The entire pitching staff has been strong this whole year, as it has down this recent skid. Every member of the four-man rotation, O'Keeffe, Nick Bolster of Cohasset, and Jessie Cole and Tim Duggan of Scituate, throw low to mid 80s with great off-speed pitches.

"We have the best pitching staff, without a doubt, in our Legion Conference," said O'Keeffe. "We don't have an ace, and we don't have a number four pitcher either."

After dropping the two to Morrisette, Cohasset-Scituate bounced back to defeat Milton 4-3 in extra innings.

Tom Fitzgerald of Scituate, the team's most used relief pitcher, threw six scoreless innings after replacing Bolster. He also helped himself by hitting a clutch RBI single late in the game to tie the score at 3-3.

"It was a must win, we had to do it," said Arnold.

The team then headed to Braintree to play a squad that year-after-year wins or comes very close to winning the State Championship.

They battled back from deficits of 1-0, 2-1, and 3-2, but Braintree smacked a walk-off three-run homer in the bottom of the seventh.

"We were playing catch-up the whole game," Arnold said.

Despite the final home run, Duggan pitched a complete game. The solid pitching of the team has provided Arnold with many complete games this season. This saves valuable arms, and enables him to use certain position players in more pinch running and hitting situations.

"[The amount of complete games] is amazing, I'll take it any day," he said.

Another big factor of the team has been the support off the bench for

Golf tourney will honor former Cohasset resident

By Julie Ann Nevero

Life-long Cohasset resident Scott Sandblom was only 35 years old when he succumbed to a heart attack in December 1995 and while his life may be over, his memory will live on forever.

On July 28, family members will sponsor the fourth annual Scott Sandblom Memorial Golf Tournament at the Pembroke Country Club beginning at 1 p.m. All proceeds from the tournament will be put toward a scholarship in his name, which has been awarded to a graduating Cohasset High senior for the past five years.

"We're just trying to do something that will live on and keep his memory alive," said Rob Sandblom, Scott's younger brother.

Rob said spots are still available, but are limited. Last year more than 120 golfers participated in the event and he is expecting that number to grow this year. Participants have primarily included family, friends, Cohasset High grads and residents, but all are welcome, Rob said.

A $110 donation includes golf, a cart, dinner and a T-shirt. Tickets to professional sporting events will be auctioned off at the end of the day. Business are encouraged to sponsor holes on the course.

"It's always a lot of fun," Rob said. "We're turning a negative into a positive."

The tournament and scholarship were developed shortly after Scott's death by Rob, his wife Liz, and Scott's best friend Jim Porter.

The scholarship is awards more than $2,500 to a graduating senior based on academic standard, athletic participation, and community service.

"Education has always been important to our family, and it was important to Scott," said Rob, who graduated from Cohasset High in Little League teams battle it out in the playoffs

By Julie Ann Nevero
STAFF WRITER

Cohasset's 12-and-under little league baseball and softball teams were fixed for a showdown at last weekend's playoffs.

Both championship games were pushed to the third game of a best of three series with the A's edging out the Dodgers in the baseball division, while the Astros defeated the Diamondbacks in the softball contest.

"It was an excellent game," Dodgers coach Mark DeGiacomo said of Monday night's final game. "Both teams played really well."

While both teams displayed "excellent fielding and timely hitting," DeGiacomo said the game ultimately came down to pitching.

The Dodgers DJ Sylvia and the A's Chris Bryan went head-to-head in the final contest. Bryan got himself into a jam in the bottom of the sixth and final inning when the Dodgers had the tying and scoring runs on base, but Bryan was able to reach back and close the deal for the A's.

"It was really something," said DeGiacomo. "They're probably the best two pitchers in the league. Strength vs. strength."

After defeating the A's in the first game 20-13, the Dodgers fell in the second game 8-5, forcing a third game.

A similar outcome was reached in the softball championship. The Astros won the first game 14-10 in extra innings and were up 12-6 in the second before the Diamondbacks came back to win 14-13 in extra innings. In Sunday's final game, the Astros came out on top 12-8.

"It was a great series," said Susan Spoffard, wife of Rob Spoffard, the Diamondbacks coach.

Despite losing in the baseball championship, the Dodgers finished first in the division with a 10-5 record. The A's finished second at 8-5-2. Similarly, the Diamondbacks finished in first, losing only one game all season.

The playoffs marked the end of the spring little league season but summer All-Star ball will begin next week.

Let's make breathing easier on the South Shore!

As a health educator, we are always educating our students on the dangers of second-hand smoke in the home. They sometimes have a difficult time presenting the information to their parents. But I believe there is progress being made. Some parents have agreed to smoke outside their home and others only in certain areas of the home. It's a good start.

Is your home smoke-free yet? Together we can make breathing easier in Cohasset.

this club. Not only have they produced well both offensively and defensively, but they really help inspire the everyday players.

ranked her the number one senior rider in the country. "It was so exciting."

The eight-week event ran for six weeks in Palm Beach and the final two weeks in Tampa.

In April, Johnston and her French Thoroughbred Jumper King marched in the Parade of Champions at Tampa Bay Stadium for the presentation of the championship ribbon and honors.

Just this past weekend, Johnston traveled to New Jersey to watch the US Olympic trials.

Johnston rides in the Armature Owner Jumpers Senior Division, where she dominated the charts for the most amount of wins during the 2000 season.

Competing in the Senior Division is not only exciting, she said, but fair.

"There are a lot of senior riders out there who didn't compete because everyone was put on the same level," she said. "Now that we have our own division, I think there is a lot more interest."

At the Winter Festival, she won four of the six competitions at Palm Beach, riding her own horses King and Aeriel.

Riders had to place in the top ten each week in order to stay in the hunt. By the time the competition made its way to Tampa, the 40 riders were cut to 20.

Johnston's successes on the playing field were rooted at home and in the workforce, she said.

Through her years of competition, she has managed to raise two children and run her own jewelry store.

Johnston and her husband Robert have been members of the fox hunting Myopia Club in Hamilton, Mass., for the past 10 years. The two have hunted in England with Prince Charles and have ridden with Jackie Kennedy-Onasis.

"It's so thrilling," Johnston said of the Quorn hunt, which is the most difficult in England. "It lasts about five or six hours and we do about 50 jumps a day."

Johnston's daughter Sydney, 20, and son Alex, '5, are also accomplished riders.

"We're all very passionate about it," she said.

Growing up in Manchester, Conn., Johnston was the only person in her family who rode.

"I started riding and just loved it," she said. "I began taking lessons once a week, owned a jumper and did well."

Being a wife and a mother, Johnston said she doesn't get to practice as much as she would like. The family's four horses are located an hour away from its Cohasset home.

Johnston said she makes the trip to Grazing Field's Farm in Bourne to practice six days a week for three to four hours a day.

Most of her competitions are in the New England area. She has competed in the Fieldstone Show in Halifax and in the Boston Jumper Classic.

The only drawback of the sport, Johnston said, is that it is highly expensive. The $40,000 she earned for winning the Winter Festival was put toward transportation costs.

"The horses need to be transported to every competition, they each have trainers, we have to pay someone to ride them when I'm not there, they have massage therapists, and we have competition fees," she said. "It adds up with four horses."

It is rare that a single horse makes it through the entire season, which is why when Johnston competes, she brings four.

"They really take a beating," she said. "It's very stressful for them because they are so hard going."

A successful business woman, wife, mother, and accomplished athlete, Johnston currently has no intentions of slowing down.

"I'm still having a great time," she said. "I can't imagine not competing."

miscommunication with the towns.

"If there was a message conveyed that negotiations were put off, that message was conveyed in error." Carlisle said the MBTA is anxious to continue negotiating with the two communities. "From our perspective, the talking never stopped," said Carlisle, noting that assistant secretary of transportation Jim Scanlan and Crossen have spoken by telephone this week.

Cohasset Selectmen Chairman Thomas Callahan said while his town could consider its own suit against the T if it does not receive its minimum mitigation requests, it is not likely to join in on the legal action Scituate is taking. Still, Callahan noted that launching a suit against the MBTA appears to have been a strong negotiating tool for Hingham officials, Callahan said.

"I'm not saying the towns should file suit, but it seems that the only town in the Greenbush corridor that is getting what it wants, is because it did file suit and gained some leverage," he said.

At this point, Crossen said Scituate's action to start a record review of all rail documents is a solo effort, but he's open to the idea of working with his neighbors in Cohasset to assure the towns don't miss out on rail mitigation.

"If Cohasset wants to discuss that, we would be more than happy to do that," said Crossen.

According to Scituate Selectman Susan Phippen, Tuesday's vote will help the town determine if any legal options are available to the town of Scituate. "If there are grounds for a lawsuit, it could follow, but it is not necessarily going to," Phippen cautioned. With taxpayer dollars on the line, Phippen said "a town can't sue frivolously."

Crossen said the board will work with town counsel to determine if litigation is needed and possible. Crossen emphasized that this action is not taken because the MBTA has walked away from the table. It is in response to the poor efforts the transit authority has put forward in negotiations with Scituate.

"We are not doing it to make them talk," said Crossen. "We are doing it because the lack of good faith on the part of the MBTA in dealing with Scituate on as far as mitigation is concerned."

While $45 million in mitigation, including a tunnel under its historic district, has been promised to Hingham, Crossen said Scituate is getting nothing and taking just as great a hit from the project. As the town at the end of the line, Crossen said Scituate has the most to lose from the rail restoration in every aspect.

Crossen criticized the T for not dealing fairly with the town on a host of mitigation needs and requests. While many of the specific items have been discussed only in executive session, Scituate Selectman Joseph Norton said the board is considering opening those meetings and discussions to the public.

Either way, Crossen said that dealing with the MBTA has been a frustrating experience for town officials. Talks with MBTA project manager Kevin Dasey have not been successful, but Crossen noted Dasey is merely a spokesman for higher MBTA officials. It is those officials who have made the decision to end negotiations with Scituate, he said.

"This is a top-level policy decision on their part," said Crossen, noting that it is a fatal mistake on the T's part.

Crossen said at this point he is waiting to hear from the town's lawyer's on how to proceed.

"If we have to fight with lawyer we'll fight," said Crossen, "We not want this train."

that make up a "worldwide network of mini-refuges where, because of the owner's conscientious planning, landscaping, and gardening, wildlife may find quality habitat-food, water, cover, and places to raise their young."

From the two-foot deep, year-round pool that eight-year-old Garrett Canney helped build, the numerous birdfeeders strategically placed around the yard or the cover that the yard's bushes provide — the Canneys' yard has become a mini-wildlife preserve.

Barbara Canney said that the organization encourages homeowners to let natural, native plants flourish. She said that's why her yard is ringed with mountain laurel, cherry trees, honeysuckle, boxwood and holly trees, all of which are native to the area. She pointed out that the burning bush in her front yard — and is common in many other yards throughout Cohasset — is actually not native to the region.

Outside in her backyard, the birds seem to know that the Canneys have laid-out a welcome mat for them. The surrounding bushes and trees are teeming with bluejays, cardinals, finches, robins, owls and woodpeckers. Bird songs fill the air.

The family purposely spread out the bird-feeders. "I love watching them loop around the yard," Canney said. She also said that she frequently gets sea-birds and red-tailed hawks flying in from the nearby Gulph River.

The yard is more than ample enough to allow plenty of room to play for Garrett and his friends, but the rear of the property, across a small, two-season stream that is a run-off into the Gulph watershed, is a good-sized plot of natural growth.

"We've left a lot of fallen trees to give animals a home," Canney said as she slowly walked around the area, gathering fallen brush to place in "twig piles."

Garrett said that they leave the twig piles "so birds can make nests." He also said that they leave piles of stacked wood to provide homes for small animals like chipmunks.

"It's almost medicinal," said Canney of her daily strolls. "When there aren't other people around, it's a nice time."

She counts foxes, rabbits, squirrels and chipmunks as regular visitors to her small suburban sanctuary. Garrett said he saw a muskrat one day while playing in the sprinkler, and has only seen one skunk so far.

However, the yard's serenity could be endangered. The Greenbush line borders the Canneys' property and is less than 100 yards from the house. Canney said she didn't have an opinion on the line's restoration when she moved to Cohasset from the West Coast in 1994, but said she is now worried about the future of her yard, especially the wildlife. Canney has already begun preventive measures by encouraging the growth of greenery, such as white pines, in the buffer area between her property line and the tracks.

While walking back, the strong smell of the boxwood bushes fits in perfectly with the humid summer morning. Two large boxwoods help make up a sort of peninsula of growth that juts out into the yard. "The smell is really intense," said Canney. "And they provide great cover for birds."

Not just birds, as Garrett found out. While pulling on a bush's branch, a chipmunk jumped out and sought safer shelter.

Canney said she was brought up with a respect for nature. Her parents' Long Island house was actually the 1,000th recipient of the Backyard Wildlife Habitat designation. (The Canneys' is the 25,511th property to receive the honor). She tries to instill her respect for nature in her son, and has actually approached the Joseph Osgood school about taking on a similar project.

Garrett, a student at Osgood, was six when he made a contribution to his backyard. With some help from his father, John — Garrett dug a hole, lined it with stones and created a drinking pool for area animals, including the family golden retriever. Garrett said the pool started out of necessity when his fish got too big for their tank. "We needed a place to put our fish because they were overgrowing," he said.

With the help of a feeder pipe and a heating system, the water is kept flowing year-round.

"I've only fallen in once," he said.

Canney gets a good view of the nature scene evolving in front of her eyes, from her screened-in porch. "It's so serene," she said.

Canney has used as much as 4[illegible] pounds of bird seed in a three-w[illegible] period. But buying birdseed in [illegible] and spending hours grooming, t[illegible]ming and cultivating her yard doesn't make the project any less enjoyable.

"I have fun doing it," she said.

More information on backyard habitats is available the National Wildlife Federation's website at www.nwf.org.

Naval air station mall plays a game in progress

By Jeanne M. Rideout
STAFF WRITER

Welcome to the next level.

With five sweeps of a pen, the South Shore Tri-Town Development Corporation directors in charge of base redevelopment signed a purchase and sales agreement with Virginia-based Mills Corp. to build a mall on the former South Weymouth Naval Air Station.

In doing so, they ushered in sweeping debate.

Far from bringing closure to the years-long controversy on the future of the naval air station, closed since 1997, the agreement with Mills Corp. has widened the chasm between mall proponents and detractors.

The contract has a six-month escape hatch allowing either party to end the agreement without giving reason. Opponents of the mall are ratcheting up a campaign to keep the project under a microscope as each element of the plan comes up for discussion.

"It's all up in the air now," Weymouth Town Council Paul J. Leary said.

Leary has been a vocal critic of the Mills Corp. mall from the beginning.

"This is the worst possible use of the property," Leary said.

Redevelopment requires issues such as traffic, water, sewer, and environmental cleanup of toxic sites on the base to be dealt with.

"Now both sides have to perform," James Wilson, chairman of the tri-town board of directors, said. "Each side has a series of things they have to do, milestones that must be met before any redevelopment can occur."

The tri-town board is gearing up to be more accessible to public opinion.

"We are going to have a lot more public meetings," Kenneth Goff, the tri-town board's executive director, said. "We want to be at a grass-roots level, to hear what is important to people and to address their concerns. We want to listen, we want to answer."

The tri-town board will allot 15 minutes of its meetings to hear from the public, according to Wilson.

There will also be public hearings as environmental studies are conducted, Wilson said.

Staunchly defended by tri-town board members who unanimously approved the agreement on June 15, the Mills Corp. mall would no doubt change Weymouth, Rockland and Abington forever, changes that will ripple over the entire South Shore.

> "A pharmaceutical research and development center would be a perfect use for the base, but we would have to get rid of the retail component of the reuse plan, and I don't know how we would do that."
> Paul J. Leary, president, Weymouth town council

Ground zero will be Rockland, Hingham, Abington and Weymouth.

Leary sees the mall as no less than a nuclear explosion of bad impact destroying the character of the town.

"Thank you for destroying Weymouth, because that's what you just did," Leary accused Wilson at a finger-pointing confrontation after the board approved the agreement.

The mall will impact the South Shore area in many ways.

More traffic.

More job opportunities.

More tax dollars.

More air pollution.

And more uncertainty.

Will the Mills Corp. Mall, with its trendy shops and outlet stores, bring an economic boom, or will it be the death knell to community malls in Braintree, Kingston, and Hanover?

The mall will bring jobs, but what kind? More of the same type going unfilled now?

And what if plans to redevelop the base are black flagged at this late date? Will the Navy, still owners of the base, open the door for the state or federal government to take control, bringing visions of a prison or a Logan runway in thickly residential South Weymouth?

On the plus side of the reuse plan is the up to 700 units of desperately needed senior housing to be constructed. The plan also includes an 18-hole golf course, 758 acres for open space, parks and athletic fields, space for ongoing human service programs, and 1.4 million square feet (174 acres) of space for business, office, research and development and manufacturing.

Mills Corp. has agreed to pay $23.7 million for 155 acres on the base. Mills Corp. plans to use 1.1 million square feet for a shopping center, 325,000 square feet for office development and 200,000 square feet for mixed commercial use on the perimeter of the Mills property. Ponds, open space and landscaped areas will take up 46 acres.

In addition to revenue from the sale, the Mills center and its additional developments will provide over $5 million in annual real estate tax revenue and an additional $5 million to $6 million in sale tax revenue.

The air station will be redeveloped in phases, and Phase One of the plan includes improvements to Route 18 and an access road from Route 3. Many commuters hope redevelopment will trigger improvements to Route 3 down to the Cape.

Fueled by the heat of the uncertainty, mall opponents such as the local grassroots organization COMPARE are demanding even more loudly for the tri-town board to consider other options.

And even those who have not spoken out against the mall are loudly demanding updated facts and statistics.

Mayor David Madden, a Weymouth native, has joined the ranks of those symbolically from Missouri.

On the night the tri-town board voted to approve the Mills Corp. agreement, Madden adopted a "convince me" stance.

"The Tri-Town Development Corporation still needs to convince me, and the community, that Weymouth is protected from the impacts of this proposal," Madden said. "If I am not convinced, I will request Weymouth's two representatives on the board of directors to exercise one of the many contingency clauses to terminate the agreement."

Madden urged the tri-town board to file with federal and state agencies to begin the review determining the environmental and traffic impacts of the Mills Corp. proposal.

The reuse plan calls for 240 acres of retail space. Finding a retail use generating sufficient income to fund the construction of athletic fields, the golf course and other infrastructure, while generating less traffic than the mall, has been a maze where the tri-town board has found only a mall where the cheese should be.

While the tri-town board has the authority to negotiate with any entity to use space at the air station, the board does not have the authority to change the way the land has been marked for use in the reuse plan approved by the three towns.

Leary said he favors a research and development center at the base, a use generating tax dollars and perhaps not needing the construction of an access road.

"This is the medical center of the world. A pharmaceutical research and development center would be a perfect use for the base, but we would have to get rid of the retail component of the reuse plan, and I don't know how we would do that," Leary said.

Changing the reuse plan involves a three-way approval by town meeting votes in Rockland and Abington and the approval of Weymouth's 11-member town council. However, because the tri-town board was established by an act of the Legislature, and the board is charged with implementing the existing reuse plan, an act of the Legislature might be required to change the plan, Leary said.

A move is reportedly afoot by one Rockland resident to call a special town meeting to consider changing the reuse plan.

Base redevelopment has now moved up to the next level.

Public opinion in the six months ahead can affect how the Mills Corp. project unfolds, or if the project unfolds at all.

What do you think?

The redevelopment of the Weymouth Naval Air Station is one of the most important plans for the South Shore. We're interested in what you have to say about what should be done. The authority charged with developing the plan will take the next six months to finalize plans for a potential mall and other projects. Surprises in store

Prepare for July festivities and summer weddings.

The Cohasset Consignment Shop, Route 3A, Tedeschi Plaza, Cohasset, is open Monday through Saturday, 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. and Sunday, noon to 4 p.m.

In addition to men's and women's shirts, shorts and cotton sweaters from L.L. Bean, Eddie Bauer, Land's End, The Gap, Brooks Bros., Liz Claiborne, Talbot's and Ralph Lauren, there is also an array of sport coats, a tuxedo and men's ties from England and Italy.

Rare, imported wooden puzzles and brain teasers are available as well as a Dutch shuffle board, teak canister and designer beach chair with matching umbrella, all new and many from designer catalogues.

Manager Andi Merrill of Scituate said volunteers are still needed. For more information, call 383-0687.

Proceeds from the shop provide funding for the myriad of services the Social Service League provides for the towns of Norwell, Hull, Hingham, Scituate and Cohasset. League president is Motoko Dean.

THE DESIGNING WOMAN by Kathleen Fox ASID

STAINLESS STEEL SINKS

The popularity of stainless steel sinks seems to never wane because they are light, durable, and easy to install and maintain. The primary measure of quality is the gauge, or thickness, of the steel. The higher the gauge, the thinner the material and the more easily dented it is. A typical stainless steel sink is constructed of 18-gauge steel with the high nickel content necessary to resist corrosion and safeguard luster. While a mirror finish is attractive, it shows marring and requires greater care. A brushed finish, on the other hand, adequately camouflages scratches and compliments the newest stainless steel appliances. Many newer models have been designed to provide a bit of surface flexibility to protect dropped glasses and dishes. Others provide an undercoating to control noise transmission.

There are many details involved in creating a distinctive-looking kitchen. THE DESIGNING WOMAN emphasizes individualized and complete interior design service. Our all-inclusive installation service includes ordering materials from suppliers, scheduling deliveries, and coordinating the work of craftsmen. Whether you desire a whole-room make-over or simply finishing touches to one, we can help you achieve the look you want. Our workmanship is meticulous and complete. Call us at 383-6411 to arrange a convenient consultation.

HINT: Many styles of stainless steel sinks are available as undermounts to be used with granite counters.

Support swells for Cantwell

With less than three months to go until the Democratic Primary, the Jim Cantwell Committee has been steadily building support to keep the campaign's momentum through the summer.

As previously reported, 25 current selectmen, former selectmen, and town councilors throughout the South Shore — while conducting a bus tour throughout the district recently — endorsed Cantwell. The tour highlighted Cantwell's 16 years of experience assisting South Shore residents as a selectman, assistant district attorney, State Senate Legislative Aide, and Congressional assistant.

On May 25th, State Representative Frank Hynes, D-Marshfield, and former State Senate nominee Bob Delahunt, D-Weymouth, endorsed Cantwell at an old-fashioned political rally with over 200 supporters. Following Senator Ted Kennedy's nomination at the Democratic State Convention on June 3rd, Cantwell announced he had won the support of 94 Democratic Party leaders who had been elected as delegates or alternates to represent the Plymouth-Norfolk District. Cantwell's support includes the chairmen and Democratic leaders from throughout the district. Recently, following speeches by all three candidates for the State Senate, the Norfolk County Central Labor Council, with a 46-6 vote, overwhelmingly recommended Cantwell for endorsement by the AFL-CIO.

Officials, residents show support for Bradley

Former Plymouth County Prosecutor and current Democratic Candidate for State Representative Garrett Bradley met with Cohasset voters at an event sponsored by Cohasset elected officials, Fred Koed, Ronnie McMorris, Michael Sullivan and Tom Callahan. The dialogue focused on issues affecting the community and how they can be addressed at the local and state levels.

"Active representation starts by listening to the voters, as Mary Jeanette Murray has done for over 25 years," stated Bradley. "I am committed to this style of government where residents can have direct communication with their elected officials. It started two years ago when I knocked on over 12,000 doors to talk to voters about their concerns and my candidacy, it is present today as I am determined to reach even more voters, and it will continue if I am elected as your next State Representative."

As State Representative, Garrett Bradley hopes to provide quality healthcare for all, improve education and reduce property taxes.

Labor organizations endorse Bradley

Former Plymouth County Prosecutor and current Democratic Candidate for State Representative Garrett Bradley recently received the endorsement of many labor organizations throughout the region.

"It is with great pleasure that the men and women of Ironworkers Local 7 endorse your candidacy," stated Nicholas Kapolis, President of the International Association of Ironworkers Local 7. "We appreciate your work on behalf of the working men and women of Massachusetts."

Bradley also received the endorsement of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers Local 103 and the International Association of Asbestos Workers Local 6, as well as the United Food and Commercial Workers Local 791 and the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers Local 2222. "I am proud to have earned these endorsements." stated Bradley. "These organizations represent hard-working families throughout the district. Their support means that I am fighting for the right issues."

Bradley has met with many other labor organizations and hopes to receive more endorsements throughout the summer. He continues to actively campaign throughout the district by going to door-to-door and speaking with voters directly.

Election policy

The Mariner encourages submissions from candidates for state and local races in the September and November elections. Throughout the months ahead we will host a candidates forum in our newspaper where candidates are allowed to submit statements of no more than 200 words addressing issues.

The statements will be run on a space-available basis and may be edited for length and purposes of taste and libel. Readers will be informed that the statements are the views and facts as the candidate sees them.

During the election season we will not accept letters to the editor from candidates or from residents who are writing to endorse a candidate. Further questions about our policy should be directed to the editor.

In addition to the forum, we will run regular stories on the issues and profiles on the candidates. We encourage readers to provide us with feedback on issues they would like explored in the coming months.

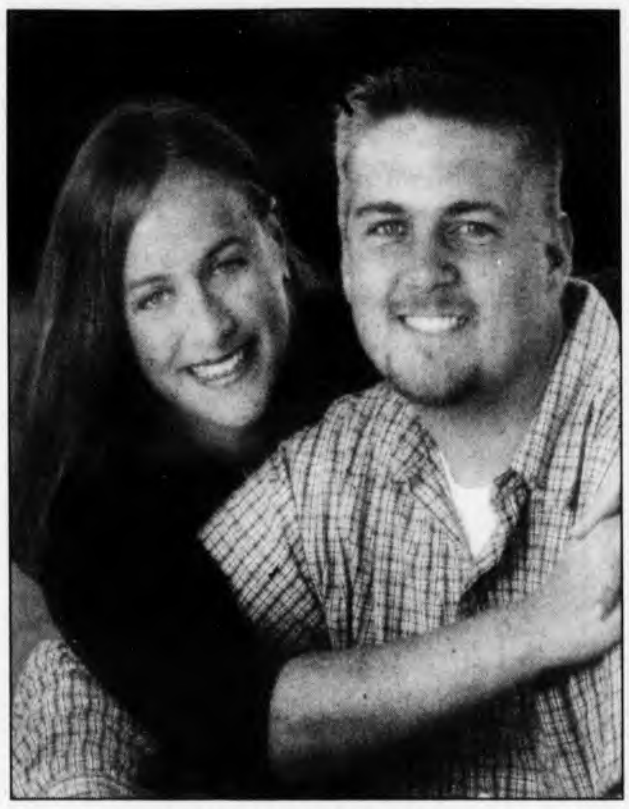
WEDDINGS & ENGAGEMENTS



Alison Chase and Scott William Estabrooks

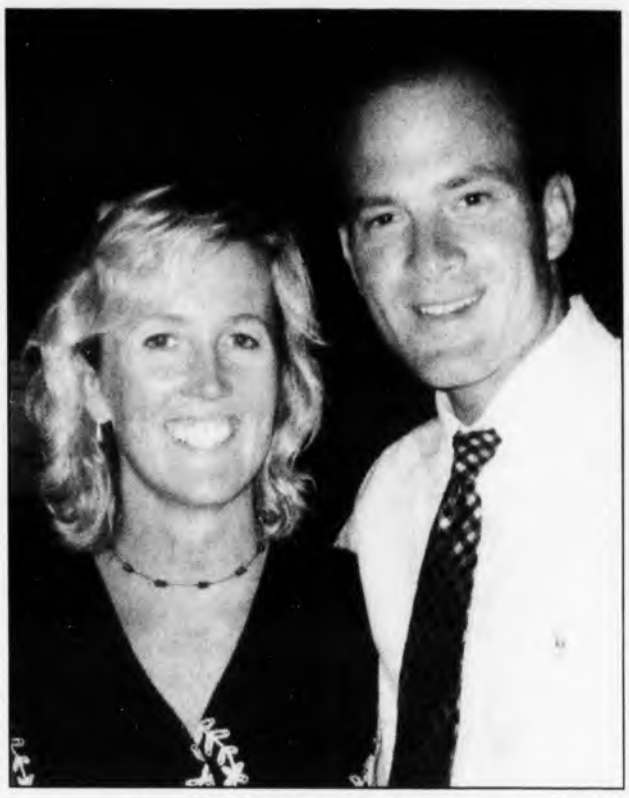
Doherty — Estabrooks

Mr. and Mrs. John Doherty of Sandwich, formerly of Cohasset, announce the engagement of their daughter Alison Chase to Scott William Estabrooks, son of Mr. and Mrs. William Estabrooks of Goffstown, N.H.

The bride-to-be is a graduate of Ithaca College and a product marketing manager for Swarovski.

Her fiancé graduated from the University of New Hampshire and owns and markets for the franchise, Protect Painters.

A Sept. 3 wedding is planned in Cohasset.



Margaret Mary Hession and David Warren Vose

Hession — Vose

Mr. and Mrs. Michael Hession of West Harwich, Maine, announce the engagement of their daughter, Margaret Mary Hession to David Warren Vose of Wellesley, son of Mr. and Mrs. D. Warren Vose Jr. of Edgartown, Maine.

The bride to be graduated from Woonsocket High School, R.I., and Boston College. She is employed as vice president with Fidelity Investments.

Her fiancé graduated from Bromfield School, Harvard, and the University of Mass. He is employed as a freelancer in web design.

A Sept. 9 wedding is planned.

SCHOOL NOTEBOOK

Benjamin Bixby

Leadership program

Benjamin Bixby, a junior at Cohasset High School in 1999-2000, was selected to participate in an Economics for Leaders program being conducted by The College of William & Mary, Williamsburg, Va., June 11-18.

Ben was one of 35 students from around the country who was honored by being accepted into the Williamsburg Economics for Leaders program which was sponsored by the Foundation for Teaching Economics, a Davis, Calif., nonprofit foundation. All of the students were selected because they have demonstrated leadership potential.

The week-long course combines leadership training and economics. During the week, students learn an economic way of thinking about human behavior and experience the interaction of different leadership styles within a group. As a result, they develop a clearer insight into how the world works, knowledge that is especially helpful to those aspiring to leadership positions. Economic education for these future leaders is especially important because the costs of bad or misdirected public policies can be enormous.

OBITUARIES

Jack Silvia

Jack Silvia, 82, of Cohasset, a self-employed lobster fisherman in Cohasset Harbor for more than 50 years, died June 25 at South Shore Hospital after a long illness.

A lifelong resident of Cohasset, he enjoyed riding motorcycles, skin diving and swimming.

He leaves his wife, Lois F. (Mathews) Silvia; four sons, Jack P. Silvia, Dale Silvia, Dana Silvia and Kenn Silvia, all of Cohasset; a sister, Laura Ippolito of Brockton; and nine grandchildren.

A funeral Mass was celebrated at St. Anthony's Church in Cohasset. Interment was in Woodside Cemetery, Cohasset.

Arrangements were by the McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home, Cohasset.

Contributions in Mr. Silvia's memory may be made to the American Cancer Society, 1115 West Chestnut St., Brockton 02301.

Frederick Hasselbrook Grassie

Frederick Hasselbrook Grassie died June 19 at Pope House, Weymouth.

Mr. Grassie was born, raised and educated in Cohasset, graduating from Cohasset High School, class of 1933.

A well known businessman, he was the owner/operator of service stations in Cohasset.

He sponsored many youth sport programs and was a member of Cohasset Grange, Cohasset Men's Breakfast Club and a member of Cape Cod Carvers. He was an accomplished bird carver and resided in Yarmouth from 1970-1995.

He leaves his wife of 62 years, Eleanor (Cicchese) Grassie of Cohasset; two daughters, Paula Berube of Yarmouth and Ritamarie Hardwick of Saint Augustine, Fla.; a son, Detective (Rick) Grassie Jr. of Cohasset; six grandchildren and six great-grandchildren.

A memorial Mass was celebrated at Saint Anthony Church, Cohasset.

Arrangements were by the McNamara Funeral Home.

Memorial contributions may be made to the Saint Anthony Parish, 129 South Main St., Cohasset 02025 or Cohasset Rescue and Fire.

Rides offered to worship services

Transportation for the elderly and disabled to and from worship services can be scheduled by calling Patricia Sargent at 383-9215 by noontime the preceding Friday. This service is provided to Cohasset residents by the Cohasset Council on Elder Affairs.

Overhauls planned at Cohasset town docks

By Rick Collins
STAFF WRITER

The financing has been arranged, the contract awarded and now work to overhaul the town's four docks is expected to begin this fall.

According to Harbormaster John "Moose" Winters, the state has agreed to split the cost of the project 50-50 with the town, thanks to some leftover dredging funds. He also said MarineTech of West Yarmouth was awarded the contract for the work.

MarineTech was the low bidder on the project, submitting a bid of $192,301; the second lowest bid was $40,000 more than that. Winters said it was the only bid that was within the $218,000 budget for the project, but added that MarineTech was the firm that removed the moorings from the harbor during dredging in 1998, and he was satisfied with the work.

The four docks to receive work are the Margin Street dock, which will be replaced completely, Lawrence Wharf and Fisherman's Wharf, both on Border Street, and Government Wharf on Government Island.

At Lawrence Wharf, just the dock will be replaced with two 30-foot-by-30-foot docks, attached to the pier by a 30-foot-by-4-foot aluminum gangway. Fisherman's Wharf's two 26-foot-by-10-foot docks will be replaced with two docks the same dimension, but will also have a new 30-foot-by-4-foot aluminum gangway.

Government Wharf will see its three docks replaced by a 72-foot-by-16-foot dock, with a 20-foot-by-6-foot dock attached. It will be connected to the pier by two 30-foot-by-4-foot gangways in an effort to stabilize the dock from the incoming Gulph River current.

Margin Street will pose the biggest problem for the project. Winters said the pier and dock was never certified under Chapter 31 requirements and will have to go through the permit application process before work begins on it. All 26 pilings underneath the 130-foot long pier will be replaced and strengthened with reinforced concrete. A gangway identical to the ones the other wharf's will have will connect the Margin Street pier with the new dock. The current 30-foot-by-15-foot dock will be replaced by a dock the same size, plus a perpendicular dock 40 feet by eight feet. The second dock will be slightly off-center so to avoid trespassing on the federal dredging lane.

Winters said that MarineTech won't begin the project until the state approves the Margin Street pier plans, so to not break up the project, a move supported by Town Manager Mark Haddad.

The improvements are the first to be performed on the docks since they were redecked 10 years ago, according to Assistant Harbormaster Robert Baggs.

The Margin Street dock and pier will be completely replaced along with the three other town wharves. It recently was part of the sprucing up the harbor area received courtesy of Peter Roy.

JUNE 28-29, 2000

Ready, set, Van Gogh

By City Lights

Margareta Mildsommar
CNC ARTS WRITER

The rhythmic pounding of a hammer competes with the sound of an electrical lift in the Gund Gallery of the Museum of Fine Art, in Boston, where close to 80 paintings and drawings have been hung in the 10,000-square-foot space. A few spaces remain for artworks yet to be revealed, but the gallery is a dazzling display of one of the great, iconic artists of the modern world.

But before the show opens, there is the vast, usually invisible effort to make it happen.

It took three years to pull this exhibit together from concept to resolution. It took less than a week to reconstruct the gallery, paint its walls and hang the art pieces. Currently, during the last step of the hanging process, the lights, labels and audio tour signs are being fine-tuned in preparation for the inrush of viewers expected to attend the show which opens July 2.

Senior exhibit designer Valerie Foster walks around the gallery with a light meter, reading the light that falls on each canvas. It has to be sufficient to properly illuminate the paintings while staying below levels which could damage the fragile faces of prostitutes, peasants, bohemians and neighbors of the Dutch artist.

Electrician Max McNeil stands in the lift, 17 feet up, adjusting some spot lights shining on the artist's Paris paintings.

For "Van Gogh: Face to Face," which runs through Sept. 24, the museum has elected to set aside the familiar sunflowers and starry skies that have been the most popular of Van Gogh's paintings. Instead, the exhibition presents his portraits, which the artist himself deemed his most important work, although they remain far less familiar.

"What we wanted to do was to extract a theme that is a constant but fairly narrow, namely the human being — the face," explains George Shackelford, chairman of the department for modern art at the MFA, and curator of the exhibition which is a collaboration between the MFA, The Detroit Institute of Art and the Philadelphia Museum of Art.

"We expanded out from that core to embrace the entire career of the artist," he continues, "from his beginnings as a self-taught draftsman in the years around 1880, to his death, 10 years later."

With this idea in mind, the three institutions first sifted through their individual collections, then took their quest global.

The works for the holiday

The skies above the South Shore will be aglow this week as several towns celebrate our nation's birthday with breathtaking fireworks displays. Road races and parades are also stepping off in many South Shore communities along with carnivals and other fun family events. Following is a list of some of best places to celebrate the Fourth of July.

Summer fun flows at WaterWorks

Fifth season underway at Marina Bay hot spot

Barbecue, billiards, beach and bands best describe WaterWorks, New England's largest, outdoor waterfront summer club which opened for its fifth season last month. Located at picturesque Marina Bay in Quincy, WaterWorks is continuing to evolve this season as one the area's most dynamic dance clubs with fresh formats and programming.

"Last year we accomplished our goal of transforming WaterWorks into a high energy dance club. Now with the expanded light and sound system on the dance floor and a hipper crowd, the energy at WaterWorks rivals that of the most popular clubs in Boston. We hope to continue building momentum this season," said owner Ed Kane.

Thirty-foot palm trees, acres of beach sand, and natural sea breezes create a tropical ambience unprecedented on the South Shore.

In addition to welcoming Boston's well-known club bands including Entrain, The Catunes, Felix Brown and Those Guys, this season WaterWorks offers a weekly schedule of DJs to rival the best dance clubs in the metropolitan Boston area. On Wednesday WaterWorks presents "Rock & Roll Wednesday" with DJ Bloomie. Thursday nights is entitled "The Wave" with well-known Boston DJs David James and Mike Giosciua spinning '80s and '90s dance remixes. Every Friday evening is "Kiss 108 A-Go-Go" featuring DJ Randy from the WXKS-FM Matty in the Morning radio show who will be conducting weekly dance contests and prize giveaways. Saturday is "Discotech 2000" with DJ Deja, a dance classics party. Sunday welcomes the return of the "Reggae Beach Party" featuring live reggae band Duh Station at 3 p.m. and live party bands at 8 p.m. along with "Grove Back" featuring WaterWorks resident DJ Tim Collins.

In addition to musical entertainment, WaterWorks features a 12-table billiard pavilion, hi-tech video games and a beach volleyball court. In the tradition of summertime in New England, WaterWorks also boasts an authentic pit barbecue and 12'x12' smoker. The menu, fueled by Eat Well's reputation in the food industry, includes pulled pork sandwich, BBQ chicken, homemade sausages and fresh seafood specials.

WaterWorks is open Wednesday through Friday, 5 p.m. to 1 a.m.; and Sunday 1 p.m. to 1 a.m. For more information call WaterWorks' information line at (617) 689-0600 or online at www.eatwellinc.com/waterworks.

Grilled Clams and Mussels

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

Cook and Know!

How would you like a recipe for an appetizer that is dead simple, can be cooked on the grill in just a few minutes, and which shouts out SUMMER?

Well, I came across such a recipe recently in "The Thrill of the Grill" by John Willoughby and Chris Schlesinger. They grill clams over high heat on one side of the grill while heating a dipping sauce in a disposable aluminum pan on the other side. Cover for a feast: the sauce made from butter, wine, lemon, parsley, oil and pepper. Once cooked, the clams are thrown into the pan, mixed with sauce, and then served to guests along with a big stack of napkins. Easy, fun, and delicious.

I started my investigation by checking out the seafood. Four pounds of either clams or mussels are enough to serve six as an appetizer. However, to make this recipe worthwhile, the shellfish has to be absolutely fresh – don't muck around with tough, tasteless mussels or metallic-tasting clams. Oh, and I am no fan of large clams. I vastly prefer littlenecks (the smallest), to cherrystones (medium size) and steamers (the largest). (The larger the clam, the bigger the belly, and, in my opinion, the worse the taste.) The same preference for size also applies to mussels – the really big ones are, well, disgusting. (Mussels need to be well scrubbed and their beards must be removed.) I also found that this recipe is best made with either clams or mussels; a combination tasted unnatural.

All of the tests were conducted using a charcoal grill and I found that the heat of the fire isn't terribly important — clams and mussels will cook just fine at a range of temperatures. I did find, however, that medium high heat works quickly and still allows time for other grilling. The original recipe calls for building a two-level fire: one side for the grilling and for heating the sauce. Since I have only a 21-inch grill, this was not practical since it left too little room for the four pounds of shellfish. Instead, I simply heated the butter sauce on the stove. How long does it take to cook clams and mussels? Clams were done in 8 to 10 minute and smaller mussels were ready in just 5 minutes. They are done when the shells open. As for the sauce, it was excellent but a tad on the buttery side. (The authors call for a half pound of butter.) I decided to drastically cut back on the butter and ended up with 1/3 cup olive oil, 1/3 cup white wine, and only 4 tablespoons butter. A bit of garlic or shallot also seemed called for (use either 1 tablespoon garlic or 2 tablespoons shallots) and salt, lemon juice, and chopped parsley all seemed naturals.

To make the sauce, I first combined the butter, oil, wine and garlic in a saucepan over low heat (this can be left covered at room temperature for up to 4 hours) and then, just before using the sauce, I add the lemon juice, parsley and freshly ground pepper. Nothing could be easier and few things in life are much better!

GRILLED CLAMS OR MUSSELS WITH GARLIC SUMMER SAUCE

Make sure that the clams or mussels are absolutely fresh and use the smallest specimens you can find.

1/3 cup high quality olive oil
4 tablespoons unsalted butter
1/3 cup white wine
1 tablespoon finely minced garlic or 2 tablespoons minced shallots
4 pounds littleneck clams or small mussels (mussels must be well scrubbed and have beards removed)
2 tablespoons fresh lemon juice from 1 large lemon
3 tablespoons chopped fresh parsley or 2 tablespoons parsley and 1 tablespoon chives

1. Place a small saucepan over low heat. Add the oil, butter, wine and garlic. When the butter has melted and the mixture is bubbling around the edges, about 3 minutes, remove from heat and set aside.

2. Prepare your grill to a medium high heat. Meanwhile, have ready a disposable aluminum pan that can accommodate all of the clams. Add the lemon juice and herbs to the sauce. Taste for salt and pepper. Pour the sauce into aluminum pan. Place the cleaned clams or mussels directly onto the grill. As each one opens remove it (tongs worked well) to the bowl of sauce. (It is a good idea to toss the contents of the pan periodically.) Clams take 8-10 minutes to cook; mussels about 5 minutes. Mix the sauce and shellfish well and serve immediately. Have a crusty loaf of bread (even cheap supermarket Italian bread works just fine) on hand to mop up the extra sauce.

Serves 6 as an appetizer

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

Most people are already familiar with astrological sun signs – those presumed indicators of personality and future. There are, however, much more telling influences, as anyone who has studied astrology knows.

I try to do something a little different with my astrological forecasts. I like to compare astrology with meteorology. Just as meteorologists predict the physical weather – if there will be sun or precipitation – an astrologer can forecast the mental and emotional weather ahead.

A meteorologist tells you whether to bring an umbrella or sunglasses to work. By charting the course of the heavens and the various effects of celestial spheres on the human condition, I can tell you what type of day we are likely to have and how people are likely to react. My goal is to help you be prepared for the week ahead

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 28

Roll up your sleeves and plan to get a lot accomplished today. The moon continues its travel in practical Taurus. A rough spot is in effect between 5:04-8:04 a.m. when the moon aligns with Uranus and may disrupt the flow of the morning. However, the remainder of the day rates high for productivity. Keep your nose to the grindstone. At 10:34 p.m. the Taurus moon aligns with Jupiter and becomes inactive. A Gemini moon takes over at 10:59 p.m.

THURSDAY, JUNE 29

The moon travels in Gemini today and tomorrow. Because the sign Gemini is ruled by Mercury, there may be more incidents of mechanical or electrical breakdown, delays, unexpected obstacles, freak accidents. Take your time. Avoid rigid schedules. Do not make important decisions or act on impulse. Use common sense. Choose your words carefully, particularly between 2:33-5:33 p.m., when the moon opposes Pluto. Handle a variety of jobs rather than one that demands mental focus and concentration.

FRIDAY, JUNE 30

The giant planet Jupiter takes the spotlight today. At 3:35 a.m. Jupiter moves into the sign Gemini, remaining there until July 2001. Jupiter will bring new opportunities for personal growth and gain to people who are born under the sun sign Gemini. This day is prime for vacationing. If you are working, it may be difficult to focus on mundane matters. New starts are not advised. The Gemini moon becomes inactive from 7:47 a.m. until 11:09 p.m., when it enters the sign Cancer.

SATURDAY, JULY 1

Three eclipses make July a rare, exciting, eventful month. Solar Eclipses culminate on the first and the thirtieth, and a lunar eclipse culminates on the sixteenth. Mercury travels in retrograde motion until the seventeenth, placing important signings, purchases, decisions off limits during the first half of the month. Wake up in a good mood this morning. Try to take extra time out for quiet reflection, meditation. The Solar Eclipse/new moon culminates at 3:20 p.m. 10-degrees of Cancer. Share a special dinner this evening with close friends and family.

SUNDAY, JULY 2

This day is ideal for family outings, get-togethers, reunions. The moon continues its travel in home- and family-oriented Cancer, active until 5:36 p.m. The communication planet, Mercury, and social Venus align at 17-degrees Cancer. Gather with family and close friends; let the good times roll. The moon enters playful Leo at 10:38 p.m. and aligns with Jupiter, encouraging late-night partying.

MONDAY, JULY 3

It may take a little time for the morning fog to wear off. A lunar opposition to dreamy Neptune is in effect until 9:00 a.m. The remainder of the day rates high for socializing, enjoying favorite leisure activities, spending quality time with friends. Forget your troubles and go for the good times.

TUESDAY, JULY 4

The Leo moon continues to generate an upbeat mood. This day may have its ups and downs, however. A lunar opposition to Uranus can make for a hectic morning. Avoid rigid times schedules; expect the unexpected and go with the flow. There may be a lull period at 6:26 p.m., when the moon aligns with Saturn and becomes inactive. Slow down. At 11:19 p.m. the moon enters Virgo.

WEDNESDAY, JULY 5

A Virgo moon and retrograde Mercury can make for a hectic workweek Allow extra time to get where you are going. Things may not go as planned. Projects can take unexpected turns. Breakdowns or unexpected obstacles are likely to surface. Sidestep emotional thunderstorms between 3:15-6:15 p.m., when the moon and Pluto align. You can make great gains on an inner spiritual level. Open your heart to higher visions.

IN BRIEF

Conway recognized as top independent realty firm

Jack Conway & Co. recently hit a high mark when it was recognized by two national real estate magazines as the number-one independent realty firm in Massachusetts and number two in all of New England.

Real Trends, a Colorado-based publication that monitors the real estate industry, ranked Conway 103rd in the United States in its annual "Real Trends 500" report on the country's largest brokerages. Among Bay State firms, Conway was the biggest privately owned, non-franchise company on the list.

Jack Conway & Co. also was the largest independent in Massachusetts on the "Top 350 Power Brokers of 2000" list released by National Relocation & Real Estate magazine of Connecticut. Conway's 106th place represented a total of 4,427 transaction sides — or closed sales in which a Conway agent participated in either the listing or sale of a property — during the past 12 months.

Both national rankings indicated that Conway is the second largest privately owned, non-franchised firm in all six New England states, behind the William Raveis agency of Shelton, Conn. "We're very proud of our independent status," said Chairman Jack Conway, who founded the firm in 1957. "We have always felt that a locally owned company serves its customers better. It also makes our agents happier to know that the decision-makers live and work in this area and can be reached easily."

Norwell-based Jack Conway & Co. has more than 600 agents in 36 offices from Boston to Cape Cod.

Crescent Realty top brokers

Michael Richardson, president Crescent Realty Group, recently announced the top brokers for May, Michael Coletta for listings and Sue McNamara for sales.

"Mike is a hard worker," said Richardson. "He is also skilled and professional. It's always great when hard work, skill and professionalism are rewarded."

McNamara, another multi-award winner expressed appreciation to her family and colleagues for their support. "Real estate is a difficult business," she remarked. "Without the cooperation of my family and the help of colleagues I could not have achieved this distinction."

"Both of these individuals represent the best of the real estate community," commented Laura Crosby, vice president. "Their success is a reflection of hard work, dedication and commitment to excellence."

Crescent Realty Group is a full-service real estate company serving the entire South Shore.

Crescent welcomes new associate

Michael Richardson, president Crescent Realty Group, announced the association of Margaret "Peggy" Parfumorse to its sales force.

"Peggy is a seasoned professional with a superior background and years of experience," said Richardson. "She is a respected Realtor with strong ties to the community and a wealth of knowledge."

Parfumorse, who was previously with a multi-office real estate company, selected to join Crescent after an exhaustive review of all local companies. "I wanted to get back to basics" said Parfumorse. "Crescent is large enough to be full service and small enough to provide the individual attention I feel is so critical."

Parfumorse, a member of national and local real estate organizations, has been awarded the distinguished ROSA Award and the President's Award. She has served on the education committee and has been a member of the local MLS board of directors.

Presently residing in Hanover, Parfumorse grew up in Norwell. She has been a CCD teacher and participated in the Campfire program. She and husband Clay have four adult children and seven grandchildren.

Crescent Realty Group is a full service real estate company serving the entire South Shore.

When fences don't make good neighbors

By Anthony Summers

Who said "good fences good neighbors make"?

In the Superior Court Case of David and Martha Dastous vs. Riccardo and Deborah Nicosia, Nicosia's fence was the hostile expression of several years of bickering.

Background

In 1989, David and Martha Dastous (plaintiffs) purchased a summer home, just a few fish flops from Salisbury Beach.

Even though the lot was not beach front, it came with a six-foot wide easement which gave the Dastous the right to pass over the abutting lot (Nicosia's Land) in order to reach the beach.

In 1992, Riccardo and Deborah Nicosia (defendants) acquired the lot next to Dastous. The deed to Nicosia specifically provided that their lot was subject to the Dastous' easement for beach access.

Now it's not always fair weather when some neighbors get together, and these two families stirred up their share of storms resulting from petty comments and snide remarks.

The last straw occurred on the day of Deborah's wedding, when Martha asked Deborah to move her rented limo so Martha could drive out over the easement.

As you recall, the easement was six feet wide and 55-feet long. Nicosia constructed a fence which divided the easement in half and ran the entire 55-foot length.

The effect of the fence was to limit the width available to three feet on either side of the newly constructed fence.

The Nicosias maintained that the fence was necessary in order to protect their property from strangers. However, it seemed that the only thing the fence accomplished was to restrict Dastous' use of the easement.

Nicosia refused to remove the fence, so Dastous brought an action seeking a court order for removal.

Discussion of law

In Massachusetts "it is settled that the owner of land which is subject to an easement, (Nicosia) owns the soil, and if necessary for his own protection…and use and enjoyment of his property, he may erect at his own expense gates or bars across the way (easement area)… provided they are so located and maintained as to not unreasonably interfere with the (easement holders) (Dastous) privilege of passage."

"However the holder of the easement (Dastous) has a right to use the way (easement area) in a reasonable manner, having regard to the …right of the servient owner (Nicosia) to use (his) property in a reasonable way." The question is whether the interference (fence) is so slight as to be reasonable in all the circumstances."

Decision

The fence erected by Nicosia served no valid purpose and it unreasonably interfered with Dastous' access to the beach. The court ordered the Nicosias to remove the fence and permanently enjoined them from interfering with Dastous' use of the easement.

Legal advice: The law of easements is one of the least understood areas of real estate law. Given the wording of the easement, there was no way Nicosia could have retained his (spite) fence.

Dastous' right to pass over the easement was clear and unqualified. Nicosia was ill advised to erect the fence and should have been advised to remove it prior to the law suit, which turned out to be a loser and a major waste of money.

As it turns out, this fence accomplished nothing but further damage to an already unpleasant relationship. Good fences don't always make good neighbors.

Preparing the final layout for a perennial border

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

As the spectacular blooms of iris, poppies and peonies fade, the perennial border experiences a brief lull as the season changes from spring to summer. This is not to say that the garden is without its stars, but some of its most flamboyant performers have taken their bows as the border awaits a new cast of players. During the intermission, several distinctive, transitional plants take center stage to entertain and delight the gardening audience.

The elegant spires of foxgloves (Digitalis spp.) dot the garden here and there, their nodding clusters of

rosy-pink or creamy-white bells heavily speckled with irregular freckles. Biennial in habit, dozens of seedlings appear each season, primarily at the front of the border, but I never have the heart to pull them out, especially when the stately stalks begin to flower. Once their seeds have scattered, the large majority of intruders at the front of the border will be eliminated, reestablishing some semblance of order to my design.

Other interim bloomers include the early blooms of Asiatic lilies, the bright yellow and golds of the long-blooming Coreopsis family, and the saucer-shaped clusters of pink, white or sunny yellow evening primroses (Oenethera spp.). Roses are coming into their glory with their magnificent, fragrant blooms in every color combination imaginable and touches of color are beginning to appear on Shasta daisies, astilbes and a few of the early daylilies. Cheerful clumps of 'Stella de Oro' daylily appear everywhere, their recurrent golden blossoms now popular for commercial plantings and home gardens throughout the country. For those who prefer a softer yellow, the cultivar 'Happy Returns' is a suitable alternative, providing a succession of pretty lemon-yellow blooms all summer long.

A weekly photographic or written journal, which documents which plants are blooming in the garden at any given time, is an ideal means of composing a garden plan. There is no disputing the challenges perennial gardeners face in creating the illusion of continuous bloom in the border when the majority of perennials flower for a limited time span. Even the best planned gardens usually need adjustments from year to year to fine tune the plant combinations and create an attractive composition.

Once the garden has been prepared and the gardener has compiled a list of plants from books, catalogs, garden tours and similar sources, the challenge of preparing a final plan has arrived. There are two ways to approach the arrangement of plants. Mass plantings, or groupings of three or more plants of the same variety, create a dramatic, stunning display, even from a distance. The other option is to group plants which bloom at approximately the same time, a practice which is often more satisfying for the compulsive collector but presents an even greater challenge as it requires considerable research.

Whichever approach you select, begin by drawing a simple map of your garden on paper noting any permanent features including rocks, trees or shrubs. The use of graph paper is often preferred as it enables you to establish a scale. Place a piece of tracing paper over your base map and consulting your list of desirable plants, preferably arranged according to the time they bloom, position early-flowering bulbs and perennials (April and May bloomers) in several clusters along your border, leaving large gaps in between for later-blooming plants. Place another piece of tracing paper over the first; fill in some of the gaps with clusters of perennials which bloom in June and July. Annuals can be jotted down directly over the area where your bulbs are planted to fill in the voids left behind once the bulb foliage has been removed. These summer-long bloomers will offer a continuity of blossoms for the remainder of the season. On another overlay of tracing paper, fill in remaining spaces with plants blooming from August until frost. Depending on the size of the garden and your level of expertise, each overlay could represent a single month or seasonal increments. Many of the perennials will have overlapping bloom periods. Be sure to vary plant forms, textures and colors. Consider foliage texture and color as an integral part of the design and select plants which offer multiple seasons of interest, particularly those which might be evergreen or provide fall and winter interest.

Repetition is a key element in a successful design for it draws your eye through the border and gives the composition rhythm. The easiest method is to repeat the same plant in several locations along the border; for instance, a single plant or grouping of Coreopsis could be planted in three locations (left, center and right) along the border. Another method, however, would be to repeat the golden yellow color in three locations using perennials such as Stella de Oro daylilies and Heliopsis in addition to Coreopsis.

The art of creating an attractive perennial garden design requires practice, patience and the willingness to make constant adjustments. I often feel as if my plants are on ball-bearings as I constantly shift them from place to place until they look right. Much of the design process involves trial and error and for less creative types, like myself, until the plants are in place and growing, I cannot visualize the final product. Through the use of maps, tracing paper, notebooks and photos, and years of experience, the process becomes easier each year and the rewards are well worth the time spent.

Braintree's Curtain Call Theatre is a winner

Dramatic group brings home awards in regional competition

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

"A Substance of Fire" didn't quite catch fire for the Curtain Call Theatre at a recent regional theatre competition, but it did set off a few sparks.

The Curtain Call Theatre, whose clubhouse and stage is located at the corner of Faxon and Union Streets in Braintree, picked "A Substance of Fire" — a work by contemporary playwright Jon Robin Baitz — as its production vehicle as it headed into this year's Eastern Massachusetts Association of Community Theatres (EMACT) competition, held at Brandeis University over Memorial Day weekend. Although the group was not able to take the production into the finals at the competition, it left a lasting impression by scooping up a batch of the contest's more coveted awards, including Best Set Design, Best Supporting Actress and Best Stage Manager.

CCT director David Miller was named as one of four nominees for Best Director, out of a total of twenty from all of the area theatre groups involved. But Miller did share in a win with Theatre member Reinhold Mahler for Best Set Design, while cast member Suzanne Carlin won for Best Supporting Actress and another crew member, Stacey Erickson, took the award for Best Stage Manager.

"A venture like this gives a lot of exposure to the theatre," said Miller before the Memorial Day weekend trek to Brandeis for the EMACT competition. "It gets us out in front of audiences who wouldn't normally see us otherwise. At an event like the EMACT festival, there are a lot of people involved in community theatre work, both locally and nationally, who get to see your work. And with luck, you begin to get recognition for your work."

The EMACT festival was the preliminary round of a community theatre competition that then moves to an overall statewide contest, taking place at the Bromfield School in Harvard, Massachusetts in September, then finally to a national competition, called the National Festival 2001, scheduled for late-June/early-July of next year at the Theatre Harrisburg in Harrisburg, Pennsylvania. Despite the noble but not entirely successful effort for the CCT at the EMACT fest, Miller assures that the experience was a good one for everyone involved. Curtain Call's entry into the fest was the first act of Baitz' stage work, a two-act play first produced on Broadway in 1995, then the following year made into a feature film directed by Daniel Sullivan and starring Meryl Streep. Like the other area community theatre groups entered in the competition, CCT's appearance was strictly slotted to 45 minutes onstage, plus five minutes to set up and strike stage sets before and after.

The "Substance of Fire" story involves family publishing patriarch, Isaac Geldhardt, who finds himself under seige. The family business is going under, but Isaac continues to want to focus on publishing non-commercial scholarly efforts, much to the dismay of his children and partners in the firm, Aaron, Martin and Sarah.

Son Aaron, hoping to reverse the family's steadily declining profits, proposes to steer the company toward contemporary works in hopes of scoring a profitable best-seller. It leads to a bitter confrontation with his father into which Martin and Sarah are also drawn in, and how they will vote will ultimately decide who gets control, father or son.

The cast of Curtain Call's "Substance" featured a quartet of Boston and South Shore based actors chosen in an open auditions call. Along with Carlin's prize-winning role as Sarah Geldhardt, the players included John O'Brien as Isaac and William Stambaugh and Nathan Blew as the brothers Martin and Aaron.

This trip to the EMACT festival was only the third for Curtain Call in the last twelve years, but also its second in three years. The theatre group went to the competition in 1998 and even took home several category awards that year as well, including Best Actress, Best Supporting Actress and Best Ensemble Cast.

Miller's overall response to Curtain Call's spot in the EMACT fest is that it's mainly good for the exposure and experience as the group becomes more and more involved in the annual competition. "Just wait til next year," he said.

For information on this summer's CCT productions, call the Theatre clubhouse at (781) 356-5113.

The result is a unique and comprehensive exhibit of portraiture spanning the decade of the artist's working life, from Dutch style to modern. Works on display come from Sidney's Art Gallery of New South Wales, the Pushkin State Museum of Fine Arts in Moscow, the Rijksmuseum in Amsterdam, and some 30 other international and national museums, galleries and private collections.

All this activity has culminated in a dramatic change in the Gund Gallery. Just a couple of weeks ago, the space was host to the photographic works of American master Edward Weston. Now they have been stripped from the walls as the paintings started arriving in crates. Among them are some very familiar faces — including seven versions of the likeness of the postman, a member of the Roulin family, along with the rest of the family. Seven self-portraits mingle with paintings of workers, farmers, women and children, some drawn with charcoal, others painted in vibrant colors.

Considering the wide variety in styles, Shackelford started off dividing van Gogh's portraits into groups.

"The show is divided by location," he explains, "because stylistically there is a change by every location, and also a change in ambition. The beginning of his Paris period is a real break as you can see just by looking at the paintings."

Overall, the art has been separated into early drawings, made in the Netherlands; the work he completed during his short stay in Paris; and finally, the paintings executed after his relocation to southern France, to the Provencal town of Arles, the mental institution in St. Remy, and his last refuge, Auvers, where the artist eventually shot himself.

"I work with the art until I get the shapes of the room to work right. And then I give all of this to the designer who then turns it into a real architectural plan and we work through issues like: How will the doorways be? Do we do a chair rail? What should the colors be?"

Bryan Campbell (left) and David Willcott hang a version of van Gogh's portrait of Camille Roulin, whose postmaster father, and mother, are also on display at the upcoming MFA exhibit

As a result of their collaboration, the gallery offers a wall palette of blue, yellow, red and white, all corresponding to the artist's shifting locations and styles.

"I ordered about 35 paint samples for this show," says senior exhibit designer Valerie Foster, who works closely with the exhibit curators and the museum's team of carpenters, painters, electricians and hanging staff.

"What we do is we have a 4-foot by 8-foot board painted and we bring it into the space and we look at it with some actual paintings to see how the color is going to work with the objects. So I ordered all these paint samples for this gallery, because all the rich colors are hard to get right. And if they are off a little bit, it's really noticeable and kind of jarring."

"The atmosphere we tried to create here," she continues, "was a modern and simplified one. We knew that the work was very complex in itself — later on the paintings get very vibrant and bright and there are patterns and textures in them that we did not want to compete with."

One of van Gogh's great legacies was his impact on the ways artists use color.

"It was as if he was a catalyst for tendencies that were already developing, but which his example unleashed," says Shackelford.

Then, there is, of course, the myth of the off-beat, misunderstood artist, a myth which Shackelford hopes this exhibit will punctuate, or at least alter.

"I would say he is close to a James Dean figure," says Shackelford, "not understood in his lifetime, dies young, the candle extinguished before it has had a chance to fully flame — and about whom a legend has grown up that is based in reality, but which is also based on our desires, our fantasies of what the starving artist is like.

"This being said, it is important to remember that this was a man of enormous passion and compassion. And when you read his letters to his brother or to his sister or to friends, you see a person of profound intelligence. He was rough and gritty and wacky, but he read not only Dutch and French, but German and English, and could speak all four languages. This is not an insignificant person and although he is self-taught, he is very well-educated. Beast, on one hand, and esthete on the other."

"Van Gogh: Face to Face" runs July 2-Sept. 24 at the Museum of Fine Art's Gund Gallery. Admission for the exhibit is $6-$20. Call (617) 542-4632.

The works for the holiday

Abington hosts one of the largest fireworks displays on the South Shore a day before July 4 as part of its "Night Before the Fourth" festivities. The fireworks go off at 10 p.m., July 3. Spectators will fill the field behind the Frolio School on Washington Street to catch the big show. Abington will also host a children's parade (July 3), three-mile road race (July 3) and two-day carnival (July 2-3). For more information call (781) 857-2996.

Hingham shoots off it's big fireworks display on Saturday, July 1 at dusk over Hingham Harbor. The town has also planned a band concert at the harbor from 7:30 to 9:30 p.m. on July 3. The Fourth of July gets off to a running start at 7 a.m. with the annual 4.7-mile road race down Main Street, followed to one of the most colorful Independence Day parades stepping off at 10 a.m.

Plymouth, America's hometown fetes the fourth with its big parade stepping off at 9:30 a.m. The day's festivities continue with the annual July 4th Concert with the Plymouth Philharmonic Orchestra (PPO) at 7:30 p.m. on the Plymouth waterfront. (Rain date: July 5 at 7:30 p.m.) The PPO concert is followed by a fabulous fireworks display along the waterfront beginning at about 9:15 p.m.

Weymouth's Wessagusset Beach will be alive with the sound of music beginning at 4 p.m. on Monday, July 3. Family entertainment will be provided by the Mark Carney Ensemble from 5 -7 p.m., the 25-piece ensemble Moonlighter from 7-9 p.m. and the Castle Entertainment Marching Band at 9 p.m. The afternoon events will also include kiddie rides, refreshments, a Kareoke contest with D.J. Paul Q and special appearance by Emmy award winner "Li'l Iguana" at 4 p.m. At 9:30 p.m. all eyes will be on the skies above Weymouth for the half-hour fireworks display. All events are sponsored by the town's July 4th Committee.

Wahlberg's career makes waves

Dorchester native talks about surviving "The Perfect Storm"

By Ed Symkus
CNC SENIOR ARTS WRITER

Before he was a movie star, before he got big bucks for prancing around in Calvin Klein ad campaigns, before he was known as the white rapper Marky Mark, Mark Wahlberg was a punk, hanging out in the streets of Dorchester, waiting for trouble to happen, usually there when it did.

"Before the music and the movies, I was just trying to get off probation and parole," says Wahlberg candidly.

"But I cleared all my warrants up before I trekked off to Hollywood," he adds with a laugh.

With starring roles in high-profile films like "Boogie Nights" and "Three Kings," Wahlberg has established a reputation for taking risks with gritty roles. His newest, "The Perfect Storm," might not provide as much of a challenge to his acting chops — since he and his co-actors are often overwhelmed by the film's visual intensity — but it's certainly a step in the right direction in maintaining his current popularity. And Wahlberg had a lot to consider in the way he would portray Bobby Shatford, the real life character he plays in the film.

"I think I was certainly in the position where I could've just gone and played the part a lot more like myself than any Gloucester fisherman," he says. "But that's certainly not what I wanted to do. I also wanted to reach out to the families but didn't want to impose either. It's obviously a very sensitive subject. This isn't World War I here, this thing happened less than a decade ago. So just by being respectful to them, they opened up to me right away. They really wanted to share as much as they could so it would be a lot more accurate.

"And I think they were all really glad that it was me and not some kid from the Valley," he adds. "I could see it now, 'The boat, man. We're goin' down, dude.'"

Until now, Wahlberg has actually stayed away from film parts that have had any local flavor to them. He hints that part of the reason is that he spent so much time trying to lose his Boston accent and didn't want to have to dredge it up again (which he does in "The Perfect Storm"). But it goes much deeper.

"It was just because I wanted to get away from that," he explains. "People were always offering me the tough kid from Boston parts or the white rapper roles. But my whole thing of being tough was to survive my neighborhood. Once I was out of my neighborhood, I could breathe easy. I have no problem putting on a suit, but I still listen to rap music. I'm proud to be from Dorchester, and I'm proud to have made it out of Dorchester. But I'm certainly not forgetting where I came from."

Asked what he would likely be doing if he didn't luck into acting, Wahlberg believes that because he had a rough upbringing, he wouldn't be doing anything related to the activities of his wayward youth.

"I would be doing something constructive, something positive," he says. "Maybe working with my hands. That's another thing I related to right off the bat [about the film]. These are all blue collar guys that are real hands-on. This is the working man. This is my dad. He was a teamster and a truck driver."

But Wahlberg is an actor, and he happens to be hot. He's already finished a starring role in the mystery "The Yards," he's halfway through filming the rock 'n' roll epic "Metal God" and early next year he'll be tackling the role originated by Peter Lawford in the George Clooney-produced remake of "Ocean's Eleven."

Even though Wahlberg is supposed to be tub-thumping "The Perfect Storm" right now, he's too excited not to rave a bit about "Metal God."

"I play a guy from Pittsburgh who's the lead singer in a tribute band," he says excitedly. "It's loosely based on the Judas Priest story. And he actually becomes the lead singer of the real band and is thrust into the spotlight and the life of sex, drugs and rock 'n' roll. Of course, at the end it's really about him trying to find his own voice. He's been living as this guy's clone for 29 years so it was time. Jennifer Aniston plays my girlfriend-manager."

Wahlberg goes on to describe a concert that was staged as one of the film's set pieces, for which almost 20,000 showed up at a sports arena when the movie band opened for Great White and White Snake.

"Here I am thinking there's gonna be all Marky Mark people in the audience," he recalls. "And it'll be fine and I don't have anything to worry about. But I looked out there and it was all hardcore heavy metal fans. They still had their Wasp T-shirts from the '84 tour. It was crazy. But they loved the show.

"It's a big movie and it was a lot of work," he adds. "I had to do more preparation than I've ever done. I worked 62 days out of 64 shooting days, and I had to spend six months of singing lessons and guitar lessons and then work on my bad English accent. It was tough."

But so was it tough to break out of a young life of crime and achieve some stardom in the music business. And so was it even tougher to make the jump from music into movies. None of this is lost on Wahlberg.

"Well, crazier things have happened," he says. "Looking back on it, it seemed to be impossible to gain the amount of respect that I have in this industry and the amount of success. But I knew that going in, so I just didn't pay attention to it. All I wanted to do was take it one project at a time, convince a filmmaker that I was right for the part, never take on more than I could handle and just focus on the work. And if the work was any good, then I'd get a little bit closer to having more to choose from and finding myself in a better position. Now looking back it's like how the hell did I do that?"

"The Perfect Storm" opens nationally on June 30.

Dorchester native, Mark Wahlberg heads to sea in the Perfect Storm opening Friday.

More compensation for a spoiled cruise

George Hobica

Ask George

By George Hobica
COPLEY NEWS SERVICE

Q: We took a Panama cruise on Celebrity Cruise Line's Zenith in December of last year. For several days off and on, the toilet in our cabin didn't work. Since there were no other cabins to move us into, we were reduced to using public restrooms aboard the ship for five days. In compensation, Celebrity has offered $400 off the brochure rate on a future cruise, an offer that I could easily get without having suffered through this experience (no one pays brochure rate these days with all the discounts readily available). If this had happened in a hotel, our stay would have been free. Can you help get more appropriate compensation?

A: Yes I can, since I think you're entitled to a partial cash refund. You're quite right that if this had happened at a Four Seasons or a Hyatt your stay would have been free. I called some folks at Royal Caribbean Cruise Line, the parent of Celebrity Cruises, and they agreed that you hadn't been compensated properly. They'll be contacting you shortly with a much more generous offer, with your choice of a cash settlement or a more significant discount on a future cruise.

Q: We signed up for a $6,000 per couple cruise through our travel agency, Travel of America, but had to cancel 33 days prior to sailing when my husband, who had no pre-existing conditions, suddenly needed open heart surgery. We had decided to decline the cancellation insurance that was offered to us. The Norwegian Cruise Line brochure we had been given stated that the penalty would be $400 per person for cancellations made between 30 and 59 days prior to sailing. We received a refund of $2,730, but $3,270 is being retained as a penalty. What can we do about this? We charged the cruise to a credit card and have put the charge "in dispute."

A: Your first mistake, especially as seniors, was to decline the insurance. There are so many reasons why people need to cancel cruises (for example, if someone in your immediate family, not just your spouse or traveling companion, becomes ill) that, unless money is no object, it's always a good idea to buy insurance. By declining the insurance you're stating more or less that you can afford to lose the cost of your cruise or a portion of it. I looked into this matter and determined that NCL claims it has refunded the total cost of your cruise, including the $800 penalty stated in the brochure (which they weren't obligated to do), back to your travel agency. So your complaint is with the agency, not the cruise line.

The agency claims that it incurred non-recoverable expenses, including the cost of your non-refundable air transportation to and from the ship's embarkation and debarkation points. Whether those expenses actually totaled $3,270 is another matter. It was smart to charge the cruise, but if your credit card company can't help, and the travel agency refuses to budge, and still you feel you've been cheated, then your only resort is small claims court or other legal action.

Q: We'll be traveling around the U.S. in our RV this summer. Is there a resource where we can find information about RV parks in various cities?

A: A very comprehensive Web site is Happy Campers, which lists RV parks throughout the country. Visit http://www.happycampers.net to find out more. Another good site for RV parks and campgrounds is Campnet at http://www.kiz.com/campnet/html/campnet.htm/

Follow up to a previous column: The Continental Airlines passenger who was stranded in Newark after her onward connecting flight was canceled (a "trip in vain" in airline parlance) was notified soon after we went to press that she was indeed entitled to a full refund on her "non-refundable" ticket, even though she was told twice by Continental representatives that she was out of luck. In general, whether or not you've begun your trip or not, if an airline can't get you where you want to go in a timely manner for whatever reason you should be able to get your money back, even if you're traveling on a non-refundable ticket. If you're told otherwise, be persistent.

Crumbly culvert at issue

Which town owns West Corner bridge?

By Rick Collins
STAFF WRITER

Cohasset could be the owner of the deteriorating West Corner Bridge, according to the Straits Pond Watershed Association.

An association official said the organization was recently told the identification number taken from the bridge indicates that Cohasset owns the culvert.

While the Mass. Highway Department has not confirmed the claim, the possibility of sole ownership has thrown another wrench into the plans to rehabilitate the heavily used culvert on Route 228.

The association said it knows of three possible ownership scenarios regarding the bridge: the first is that Cohasset is the sole owner. The second is that the bridge was a county project, which would also present a tricky situation because Cohasset is part of Norfolk County, and Hull and Hingham are part of Plymouth County. The third scenario, which is the most widely believed, is that Hull owns half of the bridge and Hingham and Cohasset each owns a quarter of the bridge. The dividing line for the three towns conjoins at the bridge, which is a major thor-

Shop owner upbeat about village future

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

First in a series

Cohasset Village can be a tough place to build a successful business. Inadequate parking, poor sidewalks, and insufficient lighting are just a few of the problems that limit access to the area. The town's Village Revitalization Task Force has been charged with the task of coming up with a master plan to revitalize the village. But the VTRF has been hampered over the past four years by a lack of municipal funding. Earlier this month, a new group, the non-profit Cohasset Revitalization Corporation , was formed to fund a village master plan with private money. The CRC's efforts are already energizing some village business owners.

Sue Strahley is one of those village business owners who is excited by the CRC. Strahley has owned and operated Cards 'n Shards in Cohasset Village for more than 20 years. In that time, she has seen many businesses come and go. Strahley said she sees the CRC as a positive development for the revitalization of Cohasset Village.

"I think the Cohasset Revitalization Corporation is terrific in every way," Strahley said. "This is the best thing to happen to the village since the movie The Witches of Eastwick came here. Without this effort, the village would stay the way it is now. I think many businesses will fail if the economy turns bad, but this could help prevent that."

The formation of the CRC has not been without controversy. Peter Roy, owner of Kimball's by the Sea and Atlantica, and Gerde Ordelheide, owner of The Red Lion Inn, are the two principal backers of the CRC. In letters to The Mariner, some local residents have described the CRC as an oligarchy intent on usurping the authority of the VRTF. Strahley rejects notions that the CRC is nothing more than a tool to benefit the town's most prominent business owners. She said the village will benefit from the backing of people like Roy and Ordelheide.

"When the Red Lion and Atlantica were closed last summer, we really felt the impact of their absence in the village business community," Strahley said. "Both Mr. Roy and Mr. Ordelheide used wonderful architects for their projects. Everything they've done has been of the highest quality, and that has helped to beautify the village.

Teens lead tours at Wilson House

By Rick Collins
STAFF WRITER

Cohasset, like most towns along the Massachusetts seacoast, is old. And like those towns, Cohasset has its share of old houses. But one of the things that makes Cohasset stand out is its youth and how that youth is involved with an old house in the village.

The Cohasset Historical Society's Captain John Wilson house on Elm Street is open for tours again this summer, with local students acting as docents.

This summer, seven teens are employed at the nearly 200-year-old house. According to program director Patricia Murphy, the part-time positions — which were made possible this year by a donation from the Cohasset Rotary Club — are great for younger, area students who are interested in working during the summer.

"Most of them aren't old enough for the 16-year-old jobs," said Murphy, who added the docents are normally 14 when they first are hired.

Courtney Anton, the program's manager, was one of those 14-year-olds who got their first summer job working at the former sea captain's house.

"It's been great. I've learned a lot of stuff and learned a lot about Cohasset too."
— Tim Anton, 14

Now 16, Courtney said the program is a "good jumping off-point" for area teens that want to get the experience of working. She said Murphy, who was her fourth-grade teacher at the Deer Hill School, asked her if she would be interested in being a docent in 1998.

"A couple of friends and I thought it would be a good summer job," Courtney recalled. She said they wrote letters to the historical society, which reviewed them, and were then accepted. Her friends have moved on but she has come back for one more summer. "It's a good way to meet people," she said.

According to the tour packet the docents have to study, Captain Wilson was born in August 1788 and became a master mariner. He captained a number of different ships, including merchant and fishing vessels. His ship and crew were once captured by British warships and had to be ransomed by the ship's owner in 1819. The wooden house located in the heart of Cohasset Village was built on town property in 1810 by area housewright David Nichols. Wilson purchased the house for the grand sum of $475 in 1810 and later bought the land from the town. Murphy said that the first

Volunteers sought for town boards

Selectmen announced a number of vacancies on various town committees.

The boards with a multiple number of vacant seats are the Arts Lottery Council with two vacancies; the Conservation Commission with one member vacancy and two associate vacancies; the Commission on Disabilities with two vacancies and an open seat for a representative of the Committee on Elder Affairs, and the Drug and Alcohol Committee with seats available for two student representatives, a representative from the school committee and the Parent School Organization.

A vacancy also exists on the Historical Commission.

Anyone interested in filling one of these vacancies should contact Town Manager Mark Haddad at 383-4105.

Beach, RTF permits

Your beach and RTF permits are expiring. You will need vehicle registrations, or if not, a Massachusetts registration, proof of residency (tax bill or rental lease). You are encouraged to purchase your sticker through the mail by providing a copy of your registration and a self-addressed return envelope.

Stickers are on sale at the town hall have the following schedule. Monday, Wednesday and Thursday 10 a.m. to 2 p.m.; Tuesday evening 5 to 7 p.m. and Friday 10 a.m. to 1 p.m. Stickers will be on sale at the DPW building Monday-Friday from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m.. Beach stickers are $7 per vehicle, and $3 per vehicle for elders over 60. RTF stickers are $100 per family, for senior citizens 65 and over will be $65 and for a single resident $50.

Permits now being issued will expire on May 31, 2001.

Time for walk-ins

Selectmen set aside 10 minutes early in their meetings, usually at 7:40 p.m., to address any concerns from members of the public who have issues that are not on the agenda.

If the matter cannot be handled briefly, it will be placed on a future agenda. Call Town Manager Mark Haddad at 383-4105 for more information. Selectmen's meetings start at 7:30 p.m. and are held on alternate Tuesdays.

The next selectmen's meeting is Tuesday, July 11.

Government Island

Hamilton Tewksbury, chairman of the Government Island Study Committee, recently sent a letter to the Board of Selectmen with two requests.

The first is for the town to repair or replace the fractured stone on the left-hand side of the road at the entrance of Government Island. In the letter, Tewksbury wrote that "[DPW head Harold Litchfield] has in the past pegged and cemented this and others —the results have been excellent."

He also asked that the two visitors parking signs in front of the Harbormaster's office be moved to the "Ed Young Parking Lot," located behind the lightkeeper's house. He said, "this move and location is for the benefit of everyone —visitors and residents."

Volunteers needed at senior center

The Cohasset Senior Center needs volunteers.

- Volunteers for Tuesday and Thursday luncheons.
- Volunteers for van drivers.
- Volunteers for an afternoon at the center.
- Volunteers for database entry.

If you can help with any of these—please call the Cohasset Elder Affairs at 383-9112.

Air Noise Task Force

Selectmen Ronnie McMorris is looking for residents to serve on a task force to examine the increasing amount of air traffic over the area.

"There seems to be a lot more air traffic over the South Shore and we need to take a look at it," she said. Hingham has already created such a task force, and McMorris hopes the two towns can work together on the issue.

The air space over Hingham, Cohasset and Scituate is used as an approach for planes landing at Logan Airport in Boston. Residents interested in serving on the task force should call the selectmen's office at 383-4105.

Feral cats

To reduce the risk of exposure to zoonitic diseases carried by cats such as rabies, cat scratch disease, toxoplasmosi etc. and reduce potential property damage, the control of feral cats is imperative. In an effort to control these nuisances the Cohasset Board of Health establishes this regulation.

1. Upon the written complaint of three or more citizens, the Board of Health in conjunction with the town's Animal Control Officer (ACO) shall perform an investigation to determine the validity of the complaint. If the complaint is considered valid, the board shall request the ACO to trap the offending cats.

2. When the ACO suspects that there is a feral cat problem, he may, with the concurrence of the health agent, initiate a trapping program without a complaint from residents.

3. If a cat which is privately owned is trapped and the owner cannot be immediately identified and returned, the owner, upon claiming the animal must pay for the cost of its apprehension, feeding and care in accordance with a fee schedule developed by the ACO.

For a copy of the complete regulation contact the Cohasset Board of Health office at 383-4116.

J.J.'s ice cream shop is a summer tradition

Has been open 40-plus years

By Rick Collins
STAFF WRITER

Once again, the long, hot, and often crowded ride along Route 3A has a familiar friend on the side of the road.

Tucked in amidst the loam piles and flower stores, the small white shack with blue trim and the little ice cream cone fluorescent sign catches your eye and maybe even subconsciously forces you to steer your car over to the side of the road.

For almost 50 years, JJ's ice cream has been a summer oasis for its patrons from Cohasset and the surrounding towns. Though the side of Route 3A might not be littered with Ford Fairlaines or Nash Ramblers heading down to Cape Cod, J.J.'s still remains a summertime Cohasset institution.

"I get a lot of compliments from people saying they used to come here when they were young, and that it hasn't changed, and I try to keep it like that," says owner Lilly Sestito.

Sestito is another thing about J.J.'s that hasn't changed. She has been a familiar face at the ice cream stand since 1980 when she first started making the swirl cones. She bought the place in 1988 from Frank Loiacono and is now in her 20th summer at the stand.

Though the menu has expanded, with the stand now serving slush puppies, extra thick ice cream with candy mixed in, and frozen yogurt, some things haven't changed. Patrons can still get homemade syrups and toppings, as well as sandwiches like ham and cheese and tuna. And, of course, don't forget the soft-serve and hard ice cream.

> "Sometimes you'll just be in the mood for soft-serve and you'll see the sign and the cone and you'll stop. That's what we did today."
> — Diane Fee of Hingham

Sestito says she learned how to make all the syrups from Charlotte Yourell, who owned the stand before Loiacono. She says that it will take her a full week to prepare all the food when she first opens in the spring, but once the summer gets into swing, it takes a matter of hours to boil down the sugar for the syrups. She also proudly boasts the largest collection of dips on the South Shore with nine. With the help of a staff of 18, ranging from ages 15-70, Sestito has been able to cut down the amount of hours she works from 80 when she first bought the stand to 20.

Though she doesn't remember who was the father and who was the son, Sestito says that J.J.'s was started sometime in the 1950s by John Joseph and Joseph John Haley. They bought the stand from the former owner of Kimball's, who used the roadside location to sell fish. Today, despite the owner changes, J.J.'s remains almost as it was some 40-odd years ago, including the small picnic area to the side.

In fact, the picnic area was one of the reasons why four-year-old Isabella Fee wanted to stop for an ice cream at JJ's earlier this week. In between bites of her chocolate and vanilla swirl, she said she liked J.J.'s because of the holes for the umbrellas, and then also said she likes it because "it's cold."

"Sometimes you'll just be in the mood for soft-serve and you'll see the sign and the cone and you'll stop. That's what we did today," said Isabella's mother Diane. Eddie and Diane Fee of Hingham, are a couple of those local residents who have been coming to JJ's for years. On this particular day, the Fees were out picking up a few items for the Fourth of July when Isabella saw JJ's and wanted to stop, so on the way back, her parents happily obliged.

Sestito says that J.J.'s serves about 200 people a day and has seen the cars lined up on Route 3A "for a good way." One worker told her that 50 cars were lined up along the roadside once.

"But that's what makes it an institution. It's been there forever, it's part of my life. I've been working there for more than half my life now. It's a great business," says Sestito adding, "We'll pretty much continue to run it the way we have."

Caution needed on Route 3A stretch

By Rick Collins
STAFF WRITER

Though J.J.'s is more known for its soft-serve ice cream, the particular stretch of Route 3A it resides on has been the site of a number of car accidents over the years.

Cohasset Police Safety Office Rick Yocum said that the part of Route 3A in the vicinity of J.J.'s is the host to "six or seven accidents a year, mostly from someone pulling in or pulling out, or someone stopping and someone else not stopping."

Other businesses in the area include landscaping businesses, Exotic Flowers & Gifts, and Marylou's Coffee shop.

The speed limit on the stretch is 50 m.p.h.

J.J.'s owner Lilly Sestito disagrees with that amount of accidents. According to Sestito, she can only remember hearing about or seeing six accidents in the 20 years she has been working at the popular ice cream shop. She doesn't think the area by her stand is anymore dangerous than the rest of Route 3A. "I've been pulling in and out of there for 18 years. You just really have to be cautious. It's no more difficult than pulling out from King Street."

Sestito said that accidents tend to occur when drivers "don't use common sense" and aren't patient.

"I've seen people backing out of here onto Route 3A," she said.

Last summer, one accident was caused when a woman visiting from England was driving on the wrong side of the road and collided with another vehicle.

Yocum said that the most dangerous part of Chief Justice Highway is at the intersection of Route 3A and Beechwood Street. Police Chief Brian Noonan called that part of Route 3A a "horrible, horrible area."

Recent letters published in the Mariner have asked the town to lower the speed limit from J.J.'s all the way up to Stop & Shop. A letter from Rose Hill residents said "the speed limit needs to be reduced and additional measures should be taken to reduce the possibility of a serious accident."

Unfortunately, Cohasset is powerless to do anything to make the street safer, as Route 3A is under state jurisdiction.

Noonan said the town has been in contact with the Massachusetts Highway Department in the past but said the agency has "declined to make any changes other than adding a few signs." He said that he has asked the state to create left and right turn only lanes at the intersection and has not yet approached the state about the area in front of J.J.'s.

Lily Brooks enjoys her ice cream cone at J.J.'s as so many have over the past 40 years. But traffic along the stretch of 3A from the vicinity of J.J.'s to Shaw's is a concern to some residents and police.

FOURTH OF JULY

I am starting off this column by hoping that everyone had a wonderful, safe and happy 4th of July long weekend! With all the cookouts, fireworks and parades, not to mention the wonderful weather, it was pretty easy to have a great time.

CURRY COLLEGE GRAD

Congratulations are in order for Megan Rhodes who recently graduated from Curry College with a Bachelor or Science in Nursing. Megan's family wants to wish her luck while she prepares to take her boards to become a Registered Nurse. We all join in with your family to wish you all the best, Megan.

NEW ARRIVAL

We also want to send some very special well-wishes to Jack and Cindy Hernan on the birth of their son John Matthew, born on May 9. John weighed in at 6lbs., 9oz and was 19-3/4 in. long. The very proud grandparents are Tom and Peg Hernan of Cohasset and Ann Whelan of Norwell. Congratulations to all!

HOST AN ARTIST

I received a nice email from Monica McKenney, director of development and public relations for the South Shore Art Center. The South Shore Art Center is offering a series of master classes as part of its Visiting Artist Summer Workshops. Eleven accomplished artists will offer in a variety of media, including drawing, photo imaging on fabric, sculpture, clay, poetry, book arts, encaustic painting and watercolor. The art center is looking for Cohasset families to provide housing for some of the artists. Their stays will range from two-to-four nights in July and August. It will be a wonderful opportunity to host our own artist-in-residence! For more information, call the Art Center at 781-383-ARTS. This certainly sounds like a wonderful opportunity for some families in Cohasset!

GRADUATING WITH HONORS

Hats off to Cohasset's James Simons, son of Robert and Judith Simons, on being elected into the Belmont Hill School Chapter of the Cum Laude Society. Membership in the prestigious society is awarded to students whose scholastic accomplishments place them in the first fifth of their graduating class. James graduated from Belmont Hill June 5 magna cum laude.

PROUD MOMENTS

Richard O'Connell, scientist and professor, recently learned that he is to be awarded the Inge Lehmann award by the American Geophysical Union at their annual meeting in December. But his proudest moment came when he donned a ceremonial gown to march in the 358th Harvard Commencement Day Academic Procession with his stepdaughter Lily Faulhaber who graduated magna cum laude from Quincy House. In October, Lily will be attending Trinity College at England's Cambridge University where she will pursue a one year's Masters program in international relations. Fantastic work to both of you on your accomplishments.

OFF TO ROANOKE

Let's hear it form Charles W. Dean, Jr. of Cohasset who was recently awarded a diploma from St. Sebastian's School in Needham. Charles is the son of Charles Sr. and Patricia Dean. Charles plans to attend Roanoke College in the fall.

BIRTHDAY WISHES

Happy Birthday Wishes... A very special Happy Birthday goes out to my father-in-law, Mr. Fred "Bud" Piepenbrink. Bud celebrated his special day on June 30th. Happy Birthday Papa!

As the warm days of Summer continue, please remember to drink lots of water, use sunscreen and always be safe. Also, with summer comes lots of littering! Please take the time if you can, to pick up any trash or bottles you may come across in your travels. It is always upsetting to see empty case boxes and bags of bottles or trash just thrown on the side of the road. If we all do our part, Cohasset will stay the beautiful town that we all love.

Please send all news and information to me at jenpiep@yahoo.com or Jennifer Piepenbrink 622 CJC Highway! Birthdays, Anniversaries and any other special days are always welcome. Have a wonderful week ahead!

From Emerald Street to a Virginia horse farm

Hingham woman married the boss at Stone & Webster

By John Connell
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

In recent weeks, news about the Stone & Webster Corporation, founded in 1889 by Charles Augustus Stone and Edwin Webster, appeared often in the financial pages of the nation's newspapers. S&W's stock tumbled from a lofty $90 a share to around $3.25, prompting the New York Stock Exchange to suspend trading in the company that was once considered the largest engineering firm in the world. Few may realize that Stone married a local girl from Hingham. This is the second part of a two-part series about Mary Agnes Leonard, who became Mary Adams Stone of Boston, later of New York and Virginia. Part one appeared on June 15 and can be viewed on the web at www.hinghamjournal.com.

The house at 24 Emerald St. in Hingham where Mary Leonard Stone lived as a girl. Her father was a stonemason and built the wall out front.

A map showing all the buildings at Rocky Point in Plymouth on nearly 500 acres. The waterfront estate was offered for sale for $85,000 in 1939 and had no takers.

Margaret Keefe Leonard) wellbeing. It was very simple — you take care of them, and I'll take care of you — so around 1908 it was decided to look for a new home in Hingham. Emerald Street was to be sold, and the search began. One house on lower Main Street was given serious consideration, however, a property on 256 South St. owned by Emerson Dizer, a shoe factory owner, came on the market. It was a large colonial with five fireplaces and many antique features. This is the house I associated with Great Aunt Margaret. As a teenager I remember the large kitchen vividly. It had a new refrigerator and next to it was one with the motor on top; a new stove and beside it a black iron coal and wood range; and a white sink and a soapstone sink. It was like one of those before and after advertisements. The land abutted the South Shore Country Club almost to the town garage on Hersey Street. There was a large barn, and before my time, it once housed a 12-cyclinder Pierce Arrow automobile. Aunt Bess told me that she donated it to the scrap metal drive during World War II. It was in perfect condition and very rarely used. I often wondered if it really hit the scrap metal pile, or if maybe it was rescued?

In 1915 the two leaders of the company decided to divide the company's authority for the first time, with Stone moving to New York City, and Webster remaining in Boston. By this time the Stones had two daughters, Margaret and Janet, and sons Charles Jr. and Whitney. Charles Sr. moved his family to a New York apartment on Fifth Avenue, but quickly decided the bustle of Manhattan was not in keeping with their preferred lifestyle. So he bought an imposing house on Long Island's Locust Valley, the apartment (a cooperative) was kept for use whenever they were in the city.

The gardens at Morven, the former Stone estate in Virginia, include a plaque honoring Mary Leonard Stone.

Their historic Virginia home, called "Morven," was built early in the 19th century from plans drawn by Thomas Jefferson. The property came to them due to a strange occurrence. Two business associates of Charles invited him to a Saratoga thoroughbred breeders' auction sale during which one of the breeders lifted Charles' hand. Charles then owned a filly, called Ladore. His friends recommended a trainer, and "the sport of kings" caught his fancy. The filly won several races, and when it came time to retire her, Charles sought advice from his friends, and they told him Virginia was the best place to go look for a farm. In 1926 he selected Morven which was a run-down farm at the time, and up for sale. In the spring Mary came down from New York and began fixing up the house, and Morven became well known for both its expanse of gardens, restored and expanded under Mary's direction, and its breeding of race horses. More than 9,000 tulips bloom in rainbow hues each spring in the largest garden at Morven. The Garden Club of Virginia's Historic Gardens is allowed to charge admission for tours once a year. There is a bronze plaque in the main garden in memory of Mary and her work. Martin Thacker built the house between 1813 and 1820, and the property abuts Monticello.

As the family's interests in Morven increased, their interest in Rocky Point in Plymouth decreased. Their lifestyle now centered on New York and Virginia, and Rocky Point started to take on the look of an abandoned estate. The plantings became overgrown and a general deterioration started to take place.

In 1939 Mary passed away in New York. She had been troubled with a heart condition that resulted from a bout with rheumatic fever as a child. Soon after her passing Rocky Point was put up for sale by a New York broker. The entire estate was offered for $85,000, and there were no takers. The chateau was torn down, and the buildings were sold off, and lots were sold. Recently I took a walk around what's left of the estate. I found the remains of a swimming pool, the front gate is still there, the stables are a residence, and one of the houses (the Green cottage) is for sale — asking price $600,000! In 1941 Charles Stone died, and Edwin Webster died in 1950.

Of Mary's children, the only one who worked for the company was Whitney Leonard Stone. He kept and lived at Morven and the New York apartment. He became president and chairman of the board at S&W. He also carried on with the racehorses at the farm. He was sensitive about being the founder's son, and the first non-engineer to head the company. He graduated from Harvard with a degree in anthropology, however, he was groomed for corporate leadership by serving in a variety of jobs, and fell into place nicely. Whitney had a strong interest in the racehorses, and his stud produced the brilliant "Shuvee," the only mare ever to win the Jockey Club Gold Cup, which she did twice. He was a key figure in both the National Horse Show, and the American Horse Show Associations, and this is how he met Jessie Bancroft Cox of Cohasset. She was a very active member of both associations, and judged many shows in New York and elsewhere. They would remain close friends all their lives. He was very active in promoting the US Equestrian Team. Whitney was asked to write the forward to the book, "The U.S.E.T. Book of Riding." In the past paragraph, he writes "I rather doubt I'll be around to see how the U.S.E.T.'s second quarter century turns out, and if the year 2000 is anything like the movie version, I wouldn't understand it anyway." He died at Morven on Oct. 2, 1979.

And so the story of Mary Agnes Adams Leonard Stone comes to an end. I spoke with her niece in Maryland recently, and I asked, "briefly would you describe Mary?" There was rather a long silence, and she replied, "a lady with a lot of smarts." It appears the education Mary received in the Hingham Public Schools was most adequate.

Mary's and Elizabeth's mother, Margaret, had a sister, Hannah Connell, who lived on South Street, and a sister, Ellen Downs, who lived on James Lane in Cohasset, and a brother William Keefe who lived on North Main Street in Cohasset.

Vacation at home

By 11 a.m. on the Friday before the Fourth of July traffic bound for Cape Cod was bumper to bumper all the way to the Sagamore Bridge.

That's to be expected on a long holiday weekend especially one with a stellar forecast like last weekend's. But as I drove past he cars and SUV's and minivans packed to their roofs with bikes and beach paraphernalia of all kinds, I thought how glad I was to be staying right at home last weekend.

When it comes to summer time fun, there's no need to leave the South Shore.

We're lucky in these parts. We live year-round in a place tourists want to visit each summer. From our sprawling pristine parklands, fresh water ponds and lakes to our beautiful beaches there is a scenic vista and an outdoor activity for every taste just around the corner or down the road.

Love the surf and salt air?

Head over to Humarock Beach in Scituate or Rexhame in Marshfield.

If scenic drives and breathtaking ocean views are more your speed, cruise down Jerusalem Road in Cohasset. While your there be sure to visit Government Island on Border Street where you can see the new Lightkeeper's Memorial or climb Beacon Rock.

Pembroke's ponds and lakes are a fresh water retreat enjoyed by swimmers and anglers alike, and boaters won't find a more scenic river ride then the one enjoyed paddling down the historic North River which runs through Marshfield, Scituate, Norwell, Hanover and Pembroke.

Wompatuck State Park in Hingham is a summertime haven for campers and cyclists. Hingham is blessed not only with a lovely harbor enjoyed by recreational boaters, but its World's End Reservation is just about the prettiest place around to picnic and walk. Hingham also shares expansive Whitney and Thayer Woods and Turkey Hill with its neighbor Cohasset — great places to take a hike. Outdoor enthusiasts can also get back to nature at Norwell's Norris Reservation or at any of the Massachusetts Audubon Society's Marshfield Wildlife Sanctuaries — they're really a birdwatcher's delight.

There's still a lot of summer to celebrate. Before you pack your bags and head out of town don't miss the vacation in your own backyard.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Support is appreciated

To the Editor:

We want to thank the Mariner for its sensitive coverage of the fatal fall on Mt. Hood of our daughter and sister, Diana Bradford Kornet. We appreciated the consideration and kindness of Mary Ford and Rick Collins in their gathering and presentation of information surrounding the accident.

The entire Kornet family wishes to express its gratitude for the outpouring of sympathy and thoughtful messages from so many friends around the South Shore. Your support has helped sustain us as we learn to live with our grief.

Election policy

The Mariner encourages submissions from candidates for state and local races in the September and November elections. Throughout the months ahead we will host a candidates forum in our newspaper where candidates are allowed to submit statements of no more than 200 words addressing issues.

During the election season we will not accept letters to the editor from candidates or from residents who are writing to endorse a candidate. Further questions about our policy should be directed to the editor.

In addition to the forum, we will run regular stories on the issues and profiles on the candidates. We encourage readers to provide us with feedback on issues they would like explored in the coming months. Editor Mary Ford can be reached by e-mail at mford@cnc.com.

Thank you!

To the Editor:

The Cohasset Youth Baseball Wine Tasting Party held by David Alexander June 16 at the home of Art and Millie Oswald, 131 Atlantic Ave, was a huge success. Dan Leahy the (DJ) had all of us dancing the night away.

The following local businesses contributed to our successful evening by donating items for the raffle. Curtis Liquors, Silver Spoon, Rudolph Adamo Salon, Sweet Surprise, Yuan Yen Do Karate, The Cohasset Greenery, Flowers by Joann, Maggie's Corner, Good Sport, Cohasset News, Exotic Flowers and Gifts, Village Wine and Spirits and Shaw's Supermarket. Thank you to all those who helped with such a wonderful event. The boys and girls of Cohasset thank you most of all.

Off to a great start

To the Editor:

The Cohasset Swim Center is off to a great start. The perimeter expansion for this year has been completed and the fundraising has begun for the new shade structure, designed by Josiah Stevenson.

The Board of Managers of the Cohasset Swim Center would like to thank all the people and businesses that contributed to the C.S.C. earlier this season:

Dickinson Direct, The Dickinson Family; John Bellefontaine, Handcarved Signs/Custom Woodworking; Exotic Flowers, The Trifiro Family, Esposito's Nursery & Garden Center, Sam & Erica; W.T. Barnes, Landscape Supplier; L & C Signs/Avon; The Village Greenery, Inc.

It would be impossible to succeed without you and your support!

The organizers of the C.S.C.'s "Family FUNdraiser" wish to express our most heartfelt thanks to all who participated and to our generous contributors!

South Shore Playhouse, South Shore Community Center, Cohasset Swim Team, Eastern Mountain Sports, Goodsports, Cohasset Cycle Shop, Hair Imports, The Shoe Market, Cohasset Golf Course, Cohasset News, JJ's, Ocean Builders, Josiah Stevenson, architect; Complete Design Services, Stop & Shop, Cohasset; Shaw's, Cohasset; Victoria Pizza, Cohasset Pizza House, Buttonwoods, Past Times, Blockbuster Video.

We would also like to thank once again all who volunteered their time and energy!

Festival on Common

To the Editor:

Driving by a serene Cohasset Common this evening, it seems hard to believe that nearly two weeks ago that same Common was filled with brightly colored tents, music, families and magnificent art work and crafts. Before the 45th Annual South Shore Art Center Festival on the Common fades into our collective memories, we would like to thank the many people who helped make this festival such a success!

First, we would like to thank all the patrons and sponsors who helped to financially underwrite the festival. We also would like to thank Sue O'Brien, Marianne Lynner and the many volunteers they organized, who worked so cheerfully throughout the festival under very difficult conditions of extreme heat, humidity and sudden rainstorms. Sally Fletcher did a fabulous job corralling a number of teenagers to work during the festival, and overseeing their work to ensure that the Common remained as beautiful and pristine as our tree and parks department keeps it. The raffle was organized by Sara Mahoney and Pat Metcalf, who pulled together prizes from many generous area merchants: Flemings, North River Frame Company, Barefoot Rugs & Country Furnishings, Karen North Wells, Kieli Storm Dooley, Susan Arnold/Ad Libs, Tosca's, South Shore Music Circus, Cohasset Tennis and Squash Club, The Good Sport, Driftway Tennis Club, Charlotte's Salon, Vinette Day Spa, Hair Imports, Joseph's Hardware, the Village Greenery, Springbrook Kids, A Matter of Taste, Curtis Liquors, Lord Higgins Antiques and Appraisals, Cohasset Jewelers and Newport Creamery.

Organizing the Art Exhibition in the main tent was a massive effort that involved Gitte Shea and Chris Whoriskey - both of whom had a team of volunteers; Chris Draves and a troop of Scituate Boy Scouts, who set up the panels to display the art; and Laura Carleton, Katherine Gennelly, Melissa Grasz, David Hilbert, Michele Meister and Lanci Valentine, who installed the artwork in the main tent.

Both Linda Bolster and Mary Foley deserve unsung hero awards for truly going the extra mile in almost single-handedly coordinating the Kids Activity Tent and the Young Artists Exhibition, respectively.

And there are still more people to thank who gave generously - Atlantic Bagel; Strawberry; Susan Kilmartin; Hassan Signs; Goodwin Graphics; Cohasset Soccer Club and Deer Hill School; North American Security in Quincy which sent us the BEST security guard in the world; Cohasset Hardware; Cohasset Greenery; Garden Craft; and Vince Longo and the South Shore Music Circus, who generously allowed their parking lot to be used for festival parking.

Finally, all the employees of the Town of Cohasset were a delight to work with and really helped make the festival such a success with their good advice and cooperation, including Mark Haddad, Peter Laugelle, Chief Noonan, Officer Yocum and Chief Lincoln.

When we say this list is not at all complete — we are not exaggerating. There were an additional 100 or so individuals who helped as volunteers, both during the festival and since January when we began planning. We sincerely thank everyone who in one way or another contributed to such a wonderful celebration of art and community! See you next year!

LIBRARY CORNER

Annual Friends of Library Meeting

The annual meeting of the Friends of the Paul Pratt Memorial Library and appreciation reception for the volunteers and staff was held Wednesday, June 14, at the home of Friends secretary, Gail Flynn. Outgoing member, Betsey Detwiler, who has served as past president, was applauded for her many contributions to the board.

Library director Janet Husband spoke to the staff and volunteers, thanking all for their efforts within the library. Husband recognized individuals who have contributed to the library by volunteering their talents as Internet teachers; David Game, Andrew Durham and Ralph Dormitzer. Paul Park, volunteer Paul Pratt Library website creator, was also recognized for his efforts.

At this time, the Friends and Trustees of the Paul Pratt Memorial Library would like to acknowledge and thank the staff and volunteers for their continued efforts and dedication to the library.

Summer reading list books

For the convenience of Cohasset students this summer, the library has made a special effort to stock up on books recommended on school reading lists. Paperback copies of these titles can be found on the two paperback racks of "Classics" in the library's New Book Room (to the left of the rotunda).

Many of the titles recommended by Cohasset's Middle and High School teachers are standard novels recommended almost universally to students, such as Jane Eyre, Lord Jim and Ethan Frome. Others examine historical or current social issues: Exodus, Black Like Me and Cry, the Beloved Country, for example.

Among the science fiction and fantasy titles are Frankenstein, Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy, and The Once and Future King. And a handful of almost bestseller titles have made the list, including The Hot Zone, The Perfect Storm, and Angela's Ashes.

Not all the recommended books are available in paperback, so students should check the PAC catalog for hardcovers that may be in the regular stacks.

Summer storytelling

The next celebrity guest reader, Dr. Steve Golden, of Cohasset will entertain children and their families at Paul Pratt Memorial Library Tuesday, July 18, at 7 p.m. This is the second in the series of Cohasset Celebrity Storytellers. Dr. Golden will be followed by local fisherman Pete Flaherty on July 25.

This is a great time to bring your kids in to meet our local celebrities. The program is free and open to all Cohasset residents. It is in conjunction with the statewide Reading Program funded by the Massachusetts Regional Library Systems.

Sparky's Puppets

Sparky Davis, a puppeteer from Rhode Island, brought her puppet show "Gotcha!" to the Paul Pratt Memorial Library June 20. The performance featured several folktales and a series of riddles involving audience participation. The audience of 45 children and 20 adults were very enthusiastic. Her stories were engaging, and the many handmade puppets had lots of personality. This performance was the first in a summer-long series of Tuesday evening programs at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library for children and their families.

Little known trivia from 1776

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

Would it hurt you to learn, the week of the Fourth Of July, that none of the Founding Fathers really enjoyed splitting a flagon of nut brown ale with John Adams?

"He is vain, irritable, and a bad calculator of the force and probable effect of the motives which govern men," said Tom Jefferson, who is often described as John's close friend.

"Well-known are his disgusting egotism, distempered jealousy, ungovernable indiscretions and vanity without bounds," added Alexander Hamilton, who later died in a duel for saying similar things about Aaron Burr.

"It has been the political career for this man to begin with hypocrisy, proceed with arrogance and finish with contempt," wrote Tom Paine, who dealt more gently with George III of England.

It was Richard Henry Lee, the delegate from Virginia, who offered the motion for independence in the Continental Congress on June 6, 1776. It was tabled, then revived in a ground swell of public support.

The Congress on June 11 named a committee of five — Adams, Jefferson, Ben Franklin, Roger Sherman and Robert Livingston — to write a rough draft of the declaration.

The committee treated their assignment like a hot potato. Jefferson proposed that Adams handle it. Adams turned down the honor.

"I am obnoxious, suspected and unpopular," said Adams, who showed himself to be a keen judge of men. "You are much otherwise. You can write 10 times better than I."

Jefferson produced a declaration of 1,817 carefully chosen words. Then the congressmen had a crack at it. They made 66 changes and cut 480 words, which the proud author referred to as "mutilations."

His original draft accused George III of hiring "Scotch and other foreign mercenaries," which was quickly erased at the horrified urging of Jim Wilson and John Witherspoon, natives of Scotland.

And when he accused George III of forcing slavery on the oppressed colonists, that was dumped when Georgia and South Carolina threatened to pull out of the convention.

Not everyone liked the Declaration.

"There is not an idea in it but what had been hackneyed in Congress for two years before," sniffed John Adams.

"I did not consider it as any part of my charge to invent new ideas altogether," replied Jefferson.

Lee's resolve for independence was finally passed 12-0, with New York abstaining, on July 2, formally read on July 3 and passed on to the printer.

The printer, one John Dunlap, promptly lost the original document but fortunately a copy was made first and that is the document that is in the National Archives right now.

The actual signing was on Aug. 2 after Congress had ordered a parchment copy made. Last to sign was Thomas McKean of Delaware. He was on duty with Washington's army in July 1776. He finally signed in 1781.

The names of those who signed the Declaration were not revealed for nearly a year, despite the fact that the home office in Old Blighty was offering a $2,500 reward for the identities.

The Brits had declared that just signing the document was an act of high treason, punishable by death.

Benjamin Harrison of Virginia, who rarely missed a meal, joked about it with his skinny colleague from Massachusetts, Elbridge Gerry.

"When the hanging comes," he said, "it will be over with me in a minute, but you will be kicking the air for an hour after I'm gone."

The average Englishman couldn't care less.

The Declaration of Independence got six lines below the fold in the London Morning Post.

Senate candidates playing hard-ball

By Jeanne M. Rideout
STAFF WRITER

The construction of a mall at the former South Weymouth Naval Air Station has reached new heights of controversy since the tri-town board in charge of redeveloping the base signed a purchase and sale agreement with Mills Corp. on June 15.

The three contenders in the Plymouth-Norfolk Senate race are playing hard-ball on the subject of the mall, and none want to be caught behind the 8 ball.

All three candidates, incumbent Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, James Cantwell, D-Weymouth, and Ted LeClair, D-Marshfield have now come out officially against the construction of the mall, but not without a skirmish between the Cantwell and Hedlund camps.

Building the Mills Corp. mall would create approximately 5,000 construction jobs, creating a boom for local workers.

However, whether or not the mall is constructed is becoming shadowed by how the mall is constructed.

Construction tradespeople were prominent at the June 15 tri-town board meeting and applauded the agreement between the board and Mills Corp., but the main issue for the South Shore Building & Construction Trades council is the use of union workers.

Therein lies the heart of the conflict between the supporters of Hedlund and Cantwell.

At the Norfolk County Labor Council meeting held in mid-June, delegates voted 46-6 to recommend Cantwell over Hedlund for the AFL-CIO endorsement to be meted out later in the campaign season.

Some delegates accused Cantwell of flip-flopping on the mall question, a charge Cantwell flatly denies. Cantwell said he never came out in favor of building the mall.

Tom MacKay, president of Building Trades Council and business agent for the pipefitters union, said Cantwell had represented himself as pro-mall before the Norfolk vote was taken, and then sent out a letters to the tri-town board saying he was against the mall.

"He's using the timing to his advantage and misrepresenting where he stands," MacKay, a Hedlund supporter, said. "He's come out against the air base. We are very upset. He says he is pro-labor and he is not with us at all."

Hedlund openly opposes the mall, but has a strong pro-labor record, MacKay said.

"Hedlund has one of the top labor records in the state. We're proud of where he stands. He's been with us 98 percent of the time," MacKay said.

Other Norfolk County delegates dispute MacKay's version.

"I was there. The mall was never discussed," Michael Smart, a delegate and member of IBEW 103, said. "Cantwell said he was 100 percent in favor of the project labor agreement."

The project labor agreement accepted by the tri-town board on June 12 provides that the South Shore Tri-Town Development Corporation hire local union workers for every construction project to be undertaken at the naval air station.

The letter Cantwell distributed to delegates at the Norfolk County Labor Council meeting stressed his support of the project labor agreement and gave his stand on other issues, but did not mention the construction of the Mills Corp. mall.

"The best aspect to come out of this situation is the tri-town board endorsing the project labor agreement,. The controversy over the construction of the Mills project is nothing compared to this agreement," Cantwell said. "The best course is to put the burden on Mills to address the legitimate concerns on water quantity and quality, traffic and economic prospects."

The scramble for the critical labor vote will continue in the days ahead, and Hedlund does not see Cantwell as the ultimate winner in the contest.

"We'll see who gets the AFL-CIO endorsement," Hedlund said.

Hedlund, Cantwell and LeClair all advocate the tri-town board continue to consider other options for base redevelopment.

"As I have been door-knocking through the district, I know people are overwhelmingly not in favor of the mall. Most people have no problem with redeveloping the naval air station, and I support developing the base to get tax revenue back to the community, but I think we need to do it in a way that development does not burden the people," LeClair said. "An industrial or business use, or a research and development facility, would create good jobs, a good benefit and good wages for the people."

St. Stephen's Church gets a needed facelift

By Rick Collins
STAFF WRITER

The black shroud that covers the steeple of St. Stephen's Church is not being used to symbolize mourning, but rejuvenation.

The 100-year old building, which houses the church's world-renowned 57-bell carillon, is undergoing a complete exterior renovation.

"We started with the copper gutters that have been repaired many times but needed to be replaced," said church treasurer Dick Avery. "When you replace the gutters you have to tear up the slates on the roof. When you tear up the slate on the roof, you might as well do some repointing (removing and replacing the mortar between the stones).

"What started as a minor project turned into something to last 100 years."

The project, which has been in the planning stages for the past two years, was started in mid-June by RPM Restoration Preservation, an area masonry company, and is expected to continue through the summer. Avery said workers would be repointing, chasing leaks in the stonework, and replacing the copper gutters and slate roof.

Avery said no building expansion is taking place.

St. Stephen's, Cohasset's only Episcopal church, is located on the granite cliff bordered by Highland Avenue and North Main Street. Repairs were made in prior years to the exterior of the building and to the carillon itself but the current renovation is the largest project the church has undertaken. The church's tower, according to Avery is 90-100 feet high but appears taller because of the cliff, a fact that makes the black-covered staging stand out even more.

"The shrouding does look impressive," Avery said.

Danish carillonneur in recital at Cohasset

Ann-Kirstine Christiansen, carillonneur of the city halls of Copenhagen and Arhus, Denmark, will be the featured artist for the third in the current series of eight summer recitals on the 57-bell Taylor carillon at St. Stephen's Episcopal Church, Cohasset, Sunday, July 9, at 6 p.m. Christiansen will play a varied program including pieces originally composed for carillon by Jef van Hool, Frank Sleijpe and Rene Vanstreels. Also included will be transcriptions and arrangements from the works of Carl Nielsen, Antonin Dvorak, Claude Debussy and Chick Corea.

The recital will be given regardless of weather conditions. In case of rain, the bells may be heard from parked cars. Printed programs, concert schedules and carillon brochures will be available, both on Cohasset Common and at prime listening areas suggested on the back of the program, and in a program stand by the church courtyard on Highland Avenue. Following the recital, listeners are invited to meet the artist, tour the tower and watch a demonstration of the carillon being played.

SPORTS

Stars of the Week

The Under 16 Girls soccer team recently completed an outstanding 9-0 season in the MYSA's South Shore League, out scoring its opponents along the way by an astounding 29-4 tally. By all reports, this accomplishment was truly a total team effort, making it difficult to single out even a handful of girls. The club was led on offense this season by Molly Flanagan and Becky Ross with 8 goals apiece, and much of the defensive burden was shouldered by stopper Maggie O'Neil and sweeper Yasmin Afshar.

A shortage of lifeguards? Not here in Cohasset

By Mike Spellman
STAFF WRITER

One might think that with the popularity of shows such as Baywatch and subsequent cheap knockoffs, most Lifeguard accreditation programs would be booked to the point where they were forced to turn aspiring young lifesavers away. Surprisingly, this is far from the case. In fact, finding qualified Lifeguards and Water Safety Instructors has been a real problem in recent years for the operators of local beaches and pool facilities.

"From what I understand, a lot of local beaches have been going without Lifeguards or not even opening at all because they can't get Lifeguards," said Sue Mavilia, a member of the Cohasset Swim Center's Board of Directors.

Fortunately, Cohasset is not one of the communities that is suffering from a shortfall on Lifeguards, thanks in large part to Mavilia's efforts.

In response to dwindling enrollment numbers in the Lifeguard certification program, Mavilia enlisted the aid this Spring of Guidance Councilors at both Scituate and Cohasset High in an effort to recruit Lifeguard candidates. This step was in addition to the regular canvassing and solicitations on the town cable channel.

How great an impact this fresh approach had on the enrollment numbers is unknown. The bottom line, however, is that 42 teenagers from Cohasset and Scituate received their Lifeguard certification this Spring, more than double what is required at the Cohasset Swim Center. Subsequently, a number of other swimming facilities have benefited. Still, this boon only goes a small way towards filling the need.

"I've been kind of surprised in the past that more younger people didn't want to do this. It's a fun job and it's not really all that hard. Plus it pays pretty well."
—Justin Golden

"I've been kind of surprised in the past that more younger people didn't want to do this," offered Justin Golden, 19, currently working his fourth Summer as a Lifeguard and Water Safety Instructor at the Cohasset Swim Center. "It's a fun job and it's not really all that hard. Plus it pays pretty well."

Lifeguards need to be at least 15 years old in order to be enroll in the 10-hour certification program. Completion of this program permits them to safeguard swimming areas.

Cohasset L.L. softball champs

In winning the League Championship, the Astros came a long way, to say the least, since losing their first five games of the season.

They defeated the Phillies in the first round of the play-off and then faced the first-placed Diamondbacks, who had lost only one game all year coming into the championship series.

Game one found the Astros trailing by 6 runs going into the last inning, where they tied the game and won in the extra inning. The Diamondbacks returned the favor in game two by making up a 6 run deficit in the sixth and winning in the extra inning. In game three, the Astros broke open a defensive game in the fifth inning and went on to win 12- 8. Both teams put on championship performances.

"The championship series was our season's best play," said head coach Dan Belz. "Every girl contributed. It was a team effort."

The list of great individual performances is near endless. Certainly, a lot of credit goes to team leaders Aly Belz, Melissa Crowley-Buck and Kristen Schwerin. Their solid pitching, hitting and fielding led the way.

"The championship series was our season's best play. Every girl contributed. It was a team effort."
— head coach Dan Belz

The younger girls performed equally well. One of the most memorable things about Game I was the clutch hitting from the bottom of the Astros' batting order. Alyssa Campbell and Sheelah Scott delivered sixth inning hits that tied the game and then seventh inning hits that won it.

Game two was a heartbreaker. There were many tears in the dugout after that game.

The game three highlights included three near perfect innings by rookie pitcher Christina Pinkus. The play of the game, though, was a great running catch by Casey Cavanaro late in the game, running down a fly ball in deep right field and taking away a would-be three run homer.

One of the more heartwarming elements of the championship run was the size and enthusiasm of the spectators. The stands were full and the fences were lined. There were cheers and moans on every play. The reaction to Casey's catch was overwhelming. What a series!

"It was small town Little League at its best," said coach Belz.

The Astros will be formally honored at the start of next season. They will enjoy the Little League Parade by riding on the Champion's Fire Truck. Then, at Barnes Field for the opening ceremonies, they will be called up individually to receive their Championship Trophies.

Girls under-16 soccer team completes a perfect season

This isn't yet common knowledge, but there are some very exciting things happening on the soccer front in Cohasset, and nothing is more exciting than what is going on within the girls soccer program.

More girls, with more skills and more enthusiasm than ever are playing at all age levels, and the results are gratifying. Certainly, nothing was more satisfying than the performance of this years Under 16 Girls soccer team. Playing in the South Shore Soccer League of the Massachusetts Youth Soccer Association, the team has just completed an undefeated and untied season, going 9-0. Not only did they win, but they consistently presented a very skilled and balanced effort, allowing the team to score 29 goals while giving up only 4. Leading the offense was Molly Flanagan and Becky Ross with 8 goals apiece. Other offensive contributors were Anna-Jane Murphy and Maura McKenney with 3 goals, followed by Carly Carter and Maggie O'Neil with 2 goals, and Katie Grimm with 1 goal. Also contributing to the offense with consistently strong performances were Emily Dean, Arianna Dedes, and Nicole Needle.

No soccer team can win without mid-fielders who can effectively control the play in the middle of the field, and turn the team quickly from defense to offense. This team was blessed with a strong core of performers who owned the middle of the field all year. This ferocious mid field contingent included Carly Carter, Maura McKenney, Deirdre Bigley, Holly Dinsmore, Cara Foley, Katie Portanova and Julie Shay.

This team was blessed with a strong core of performers who owned the middle of the field all year.

The offense was productive, the mid-fielders ferocious, and the defense was simply awesome. If the opposing offense managed to get by the mid-field they ran into two brick walls when they ran into the Stopper, Maggie O'Neil, and the Sweeper, Yasmin Afshar. Nobody went through these two players. Yet if the opposing team tried to go around Maggie and Yasmin, they ran right smack into Meaghan Rizzotti or Julie Lordan, or Nell Brewer, or Caitlin Flint. None of these defensemen was ever prepared to give an inch. For the opposition this spelled "frustration".

If this all wasn't enough, this team was blessed with not one, but two quality goal tenders in Martha Henderson and Kelly Holway. Both of the goal tenders displayed leadership on the field, and when called upon to do so made some great saves when they were needed most.

This team now goes on to compete

SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

The Cohasset Boys Under 12 Soccer team topped a field of 42 teams from 14 neighboring towns to win the Division II Coastal League Championship on Sunday, June 18th. During the entire spring season, Cohasset allowed only 3 goals and finished with a record of 7-1-1. In the playoffs, the boys beat Hingham, Marshfield and finally Hanover, in double overtime, to advance to the finals. They faced a stronger Marshfield team and won by a score of 3-0, to become the Coastal League Champions!

As league champions, they were invited to the Massachusetts Tournament of Champions the weekend of June 24-26. The soccer fields of UMass Amherst served as the site for 186 teams in sixteen divisions. In the first day of games, Wilmington (Middlesex League Champs) held off a powerful late-game surge by Cohasset to edge them out 2-1.

"We were happy to get off the field when we did," the Wilmington Coach said following the game.

In Saturday's second game, the Nashoba champions from Oakmont had a great goalkeeper who proved to be a brick wall, and their offense snuck in some shots to win 3-0.

On Sunday, Cohasset came back to play the type of game that marked their regular season. They dominated play, maintaining possession of the ball throughout most of the game. As they had done all season, defenders Sam MacDonald, Dan Trendowicz, Trevor Brady and Nick Zappolo kept the ball away from star goalkeeper, Prescott Busk. In the first half there was only one shot on Cohasset's goal. Strong midfielders, Jared Kinch, Ben Libby and Corbin Faber brought the ball up for the offense, providing opportunity for scorers Chris Ofsthun, Aidan Buick and Dan Mercurio.

As always, Matt O'Connell performed aggressively in the forward position with help from Corey Chase. A strong left side was provided by Daniel Sullivan and Brandon Smith while the right side was controlled by Anthony Fiori and Nils Sceery who gave forward assistance to set up a goal by Zach Etkind. The boys moved well together and their passes were crisp. Cohasset was thrilled with their 4-0 win.

On Sunday, Cohasset came back to play the type of game that marked their regular season.

The crowning glory came with the announcement that officials and referees of the MTOC had chosen Cohasset to receive the Sportsmanship Award for the 12-team division. The selection was based on the exemplary behavior of the players, coaches and parents. We should all feel pride in these boys who were exceptional in defeat and in victory. Coaches Rich Ofsthun and Joe Busk were great instructors as well as models for all the players. After receiving the award, the Director of the MTOC stated, "these boys are "winning in the game of life".

TAKING A SAMPLE

The first step to decorating a room is to assemble a sample board. After collecting fabrics and color chips, try mounting them on a large board known as a sample board. This serves as a miniature representation of the actual room you are decorating. With this in mind, try to keep the samples in proportion. Then, over a period of days, look at the various elements assembled on the board under a variety of lighting conditions. How do the colors stand up to overcast days and artificial lighting? Would you be happy entering a room filled with these colors and patterns for years to come? Look at the scheme as a whole and at individual contrasts of color, pattern, and texture, then use your reactions to guide your decisions about needed changes.

Color coordinating various elements of a room can be rewarding but time consuming. The interior design specialists of THE DESIGNING WOMAN understand that your time is limited. We can help you create a home that adds comfort and luxury to your life. An interior design plan includes the coordination of window treatments, flooring, furniture, and accessories. Whether you desire a whole-room make-over or simply finishing touches to one, we can help you achieve the look you want. Call us at 383-6411 to arrange a convenient appointment.

HINT: Once a room is decorated and furnished, keep the sample board for use in selecting accessories.

Girls under-16 soccer team completes perfect season in the Massachusetts Tournament of Champions in Amherst, Massachusetts on June 23rd to 25th. They will be representing the South Shore Soccer League against some of the very best girls under 16 soccer teams in the state.

This is only the second girls team to earn a spot in this annual tournament in the long history of soccer in Cohasset (last done in 1995). No matter if they win or lose these girls are all champions.

What is more, here is a secret from the writer that you can pass on.: many of the girls on this team will be playing on the CHS Girls Varsity Soccer team this Fall. I predict this team will surprise many by its performance. I further predict that Cohasset will have a string of strong girls Varsity teams into the foreseeable future, manned by some exciting talent coming along at the younger age groups. Plan to come out this Fall and see some games. You won't be disappointed.

Lacrosse registration

The Cohasset Recreation Department is now accepting registrations for a full-contact boys' rules lacrosse clinic the week of July 24-28. The clinic will be for grades 3-4 from 7:30 to 8:30 a.m. and grades 5-8 from 8:30 to 10 a.m. at Milliken Field. The fee per participant is $42 for grades 3-4 and $62 for grades 5-8, and checks can be made payable to the Town of Cohasset.

Chuck Jaffee will direct this unique opportunity to learn and develop the basic skills and concepts of lacrosse.

Registration forms can be obtained at the recreation office, first floor, Cohasset Town Hall.

Water Safety Instructors must pass through a much more rigorous 60-hour certification program, splitting that time between the classroom and the water, and the minimum age is 17. These individuals graduate fully credited swimming teachers.

Mavilia also wishes to point out that these do not have to be merely Summer jobs. In fact, there are many viable career opportunities for those with training as Lifeguards and Water Safety Instructors.

And, apparently, the rewards don't stop there.

"The Water Safety Instructor's job is a really a lot of fun if you enjoy working with kids," offered Golden. "Teaching them to swim, and seeing them getting it is really great."

Shipyard filmmakers want the personal touch

Seek anecdotes, photographs

By Carol Britton Meyer
STAFF WRITER

Powderhouse Productions, producers of historical and science documentaries for PBS and the Discovery Channel, is looking for information for a program on the Hingham Shipyard during the Second World War. The developers of the shipyard are sponsoring the project with the help of the Hingham Shipyard Historical Foundation.

The producers would like to meet men and women who worked at the yard, those who were employed in Hingham at downtown stores, restaurants or at the USO, and others who have clear recollections of the wartime period in town or even may have served on ships constructed in Hingham anywhere in the country.

A number of individuals responded to an advertisement in the Hingham Journal some time ago – a number who worked at the yard and relatives of some of the workers.

"They have some fantastic stories," said Martin Colin, spokesperson for the shipyard developers. "The story isn't just about the shipyard but how the quiet town of Hingham was impacted by the shipyard."

Photographs from that period are also needed, along with home movies revealing what life was like during the 1940s.

For further information, or to offer assistance, call producer Harry Gural or associate producer Dixie Ching at (617) 629-2200 or send an e-mail to hgural@powderhouse.net.

Memorabilia and photographs are also needed.

The producers are working with the Hingham school system to ensure the film has educational as well as entertainment value. "The War Years Remembered," written by Hingham resident Peg Charlton, is already used in the Hingham school curriculum.

Charlton and James Kinkealdy, who heads the Hingham Public Schools social studies department, are both members of the foundation's advisory committee. Other members include Ian Menzies — who was instrumental in having a plaque placed at the shipyard in 1995 dedicated to the shipyard workers — Eugene and Helen Chamberlain, Ann Collins, Stanley Hersey — who worked at the shipyard as a welder — and Capt. Mark Hirsh, founder of the Hingham Shipyard Historical Foundation.

According to Colin, Menzies was a naval officer who observed the building of the HMS Staynor, a Destroyer Escort, while stationed at the shipyard in 1943.

Some interested in the project have already loaned photographs, but more are needed.

Gural is well prepared and eager to proceed.

He has worked on projects for "The American Experience," "Frontline" and "NOVA." He has filmed all over the United States as well as the former Soviet Union, Germany, England, Israel, Italy, Turkey, Mexico and Sri Lanka. Gural has researched a number of historical documentaries, chronicling subjects ranging from the history of 20th-century technology and the women's movement to the 1936 Olympics and the Space Age. His latest program focuses on the 1999 earthquakes in Turkey.

Powderhouse Productions, an award-winning film and video production company, was founded in 1994 by film makers Joel Olicker and Tug Yourgrau.

Olicker's credits include a number of major PBS series – "NOVA," "Frontline," "The American Experience," and "Body Watch."

He also served as producer for the U.S. Agency for International Development in Latin America and has taught video and film making at Hampshire College and at the Maine Film/Video Workshops.

Yourgrau is an award-winning theatrical director and playwright as well as a filmmaker. He has produced programs for PBS and was senior producer for special projects at The Monitor Channel.

IT'S HAPPENING

Birds at Straits Pond

Twelve people from Hull and Cohasset walked around Straits Pond to identify bird species as part of Hull's Conservation Commission's Biodiversity Days. The walk was organized by the Straits Pond Watershed Association and led by Sally Avery of Cohasset.

More than 50 mute swans have lived on the pond for two months. Birds identified included:12 double-crested Cormorant, one Great Egret, one Green Heron, one back crowned night Heron, 12 Canada Geese, 59 Mute Swan & five cygnets, six American Black Duck, six Mallard, one Osprey, four Herring Gull; one Great Black-backed Gull; two Mourning Dove, one Eastern Ringbird, two Blue Jay, four American Crow, six Tree Swallow, two Barn Swallow, one Tufted titmouse (song only), eight American Robin, 12 Gray Catbird; 60 European Starling, one Yellow Warbler (many singing), three Song Sparrow, two Northern Cardinal, eight Red-winged Blackbird, 15 Common Grackle, two House Finch, five American Goldfinch, and 18 House Sparrow.

CHS Class of 1980 'missing persons'

This list is the "missing persons list" for the Cohasset High School class of 1980 that is planning its 20th reunion for July 8 at The Red Lion Inn. Please call Lynn Durkin at 383-2732, if you have any information about these graduates:

Raymond Brown, Ann Marie Gilman, Peter Colletta, Lenore Cossart, Heather Briggs, Jack MacLean, Scott Murphy, Paul Stockbridge, Linda Ryan, Chris Sieve, Julie Vida and Valerie Whitney.

'Heidi' on stage

The Cohasset Recreation Department will hold the Music Circus registrations for "Heidi" Tuesday, July 11. Music Circus children's show registrations will be open to children in the playground program and the show date for "Heidi" is Thursday, July 27.

Registrations will be held from 9 a.m. to noon and again from 1-7 p.m. at the recreation office, 1st floor, Town Hall. All tickets for the Music Circus are $6.

Registrations are held each Tuesday two weeks prior to the actual show date.

'Scollay Square'

When actor George Clooney mentioned "Scollay Square" in his crew in a scene of "The Perfect Storm," the phones started ringing at the desk at the Recording Studio in Cohasset, where the song was first recorded in 1976 by Rik Emery.

By coincidence, a C.D. has been in progress which will include the hit "Remember Of Scollay Square." It has taken months to prepare the C.D. for release; now because of the reunion and the demand for the song from actor Clooney's mention in the film, the C.D. release will be within a week, Emery said.

Costume designer at art center

Brooke Stanton, costume designer for Hollywood films including "Star Wars," "The Phantom Menace", "Patch Adams", and "What Dreams May Come," will teach several one-day workshops at the South Shore Art Center. Stanton's extensive experience includes work in textiles, wardrobe and costume construction. She will teach two workshops devoted to painting on silk. Students will create a hand-painted scarf or pillow cover depending on which workshop they attend. Students can discover the beauty and joy of painting on silk while enjoying a relaxing day in the air-conditioned art center. Take a break from the usual summertime activities and explore the ancient art of painting on silk.

The Silk Scarf Workshop will take place Friday, July 7, from 9 a.m. to 3:30 p.m.; the fee of $85 ($75 for SSAC members) includes all materials. Students will choose from a number of European designs pre-drawn on white silk. There will be a demonstration of how to properly stretch the silk on a frame, tips on various painting techniques, as well as discussion on color theory. The process is easy and the results are exquisite. For more information or to register, call 383-2787 or visit www.ssac.org.

Beach stickers

RTE 3A/I beach stickers will no longer be sold on the weekends after July 2.

Jazz concert

South Shore Conservatory's Evenings Under the Stars outdoor summer concert series presents The New Black Eagle Jazz Band Saturday, July 15, at 7 p.m. at the Carr Amphitheater in Hingham. The septet draws their extensive repertoire from the entire spectrum of the classic jazz tradition, including New Orleans jazz, ragtime and spirituals and the music of Duke Ellington, Louis Armstrong and Scott Joplin.

Tickets are available at the Hingham and Duxbury campuses, and at Nobles Camera Shop in Hingham Square, Cohasset and Norwell. Admission is $15 for pavilion seats and $7 for lawn seats.

The Carr Amphitheater is located at South Shore Conservatory at One Conservatory Drive in Hingham and is handicapped accessible. For more information, call 749-7565, Ext. 14.

'Not For Kids Only'

South Shore Conservatory's Evenings Under the Stars outdoor summer concert series presents "Not For Kids Only" Thursday, July 13, at 11 a.m. at the Carr Amphitheater in Hingham.

In the spirit of a three-ring circus, this mixed media of surprises includes a petting zoo, mime artist, cartoonist, storyteller, dancers, music and more. Tickets are available at the Hingham and Duxbury campuses, and at Nobles Camera Shop in Hingham Square, Cohasset and Norwell. Admission is $4 for pavilion seats and lawn seats.

The Carr Amphitheater is located at South Shore Conservatory at One Conservatory Drive in Hingham and is handicapped accessible. For more information, call 749-7565, Ext. 14.

Tanglewood trip

South Shore Conservatory is sponsoring a day trip to Tanglewood on Sunday, August 6, to hear the Serge and Olga Koussevitzky Memorial Concert.

The concert features The Boston Symphony Orchestra in collaboration with The Tanglewood Festival Chorus and the PALS Children's Chorus in a performance of Benjamin Britten's War Requiem. Featured soloists are Christine Goerke, soprano, Anthony Dean Griffey, tenor, and Thomas Quasthoff, bass-baritone.

Participants travel by air-conditioned motor coach to Tanglewood. Along the way, a conservatory representative will give a brief description and background of the featured music and performers. The noon arrival allows plenty of time for participants to enjoy a gourmet box lunch and a stroll around the lawns and buildings of Tanglewood before the 2:30 concert. Refreshments will be served on the return ride.

The $98 per person cost includes concert tickets, round-trip transportation, box lunch and refreshments for the return. The bus leaves from The Ellison Center for the Arts in Duxbury at 8:30 a.m. and then from the Rockland commuter parking lot at Rt. 3 and Rt. 228 at 9 a.m. The bus returns at 8:30 p.m. Call 781-749-7565, ext. 24 for registration and additional information.

OBITUARIES

Harold Goodwin

Harold F. Goodwin, 83, of Cohasset, former vice president of Millard Metal Services, died June 27 at South Shore Hospital in Weymouth after a long illness.

Mr. Goodwin was associated with Millard Metal for more than 50 years.

Born on Cape Sable Island in Nova Scotia, Canada, he lived most of his life in Cohasset.

He was a deacon of the Second Congregational Church of Cohasset for several years, a past master and 55-year member of the Komohasset Lodge of Masons and a member of the Coast Guard Auxiliary.

He leaves his wife of 60 years, Ruth I. (MacDonald) Goodwin; two sons, Bradford C. Goodwin of Eddington, Maine, and Ronald H. Goodwin of Cohasset; a daughter, Ruth V. Sve of Palos Verdes, Calif.; and seven grandchildren.

Harold F. Goodwin

Visiting hours will be at the McNamara Sparrell Funeral Home in Cohasset Friday, July 7, from 2-4 and 7-9 p.m.

A memorial service will be held at 1 p.m. Saturday, July 8, at Second Congregational Church. Interment will be private in Woodside Cemetery.

Donations in Mr. Goodwin's memory may be made to a lung or arthritis medical research organization.

Roy floats plan for harbor area sprucing

By Rick Collins
STAFF WRITER

The Cohasset harbor area is the lucky recipient of a minor makeover, courtesy of Peter Roy.

Roy volunteered to provide "an immediate sprucing up" to the area, in a letter sent to Town Manager Mark Haddad two weeks ago. He proposed painting the Margin Street dock, repair any cracked or broken areas of the Jersey barriers that make up the sea wall, and paint the pergola on Margin Street, as well as repair any broken benches or barrels. He also volunteered to re-grass, irrigate and maintain Memorial Park for the remainder of the summer.

"We're just freshening them up," said Roy spokesman Linda Shropshire.

She said Roy is currently repainting some of his property in the harbor area and volunteered to make the improvements while the work crew was around. Shropshire said in her letter to Haddad that she hoped work would be finished by the Fourth of July holiday.

"In the tough financial time we're experiencing, his generosity is appreciated," said Haddad.

oughfare for Hull and the Nantasket Beach area.

The association said that the bridge was built in 1850 and then rebuilt in 1900. Because of poor record keeping, no one knows for sure who built the bridge.

State Representative Mary Jeanette Murray said that she has asked the House Ways and Means Committee to look into funding repairs for the bridge.

"I'm not sure who actually owns it, but the bridge is the boundary of Cohasset, Hingham and Hull," she said.

Murray said she remembers her father, who was a member of the Cohasset Board of Health at the time, working with Hull to fix the Straits Pond water control valves that the are under the bridge. Also under the bridge are two large water pipes and a natural gas pipe.

The issue arose after an inspection of the bridge by association members Bill McNamara and Augie Stratoti found deteriorating support walls. Though the bridge is in no immediate danger of falling apart, McNamara and Stratoti, who is a licensed engineer, warned the association the deterioration could get worse.

The association said that the bridge was built in 1850 and then rebuilt in 1900. Because of poor record keeping, no one knows for sure who built the bridge.

"The vibration from heavy traffic usage will cause the bridge to deteriorate at a faster rate now that it has been undermined, and could result in very costly repairs if not repaired in the near future," they wrote in their report to the SPWA.

In a letter sent to the three towns, Hull resident and SPWA president Lawrie Reid recommended "action be taken to request a formal inspection by the State Bridge inspectors and that a coordinated plan to repair the culvert be drawn up by the towns of Cohasset, Hingham, and Hull as appropriate…It is our belief that by undertaking immediate repairs, more extensive and costly repairs may be avoided."

The matter is not yet scheduled to be taken up at the July 11 selectmen's meeting.

If a tri-town effort were launched, it would not be the first time the three towns formed a partnership. In 1996 the towns reached an inter-municipal agreement that provided sewer installation for part of Hingham and Cohasset. The North Cohasset sewer project, which is in the final stages, sends its sewerage to the Hull treatment plant, as does Hingham's Hull Street area.

Owner upbeat about village future

They also used local builders. I really like that."

Strahley pointed out that the CRC is shaping up as an organization made up of a wide cross-section of village businesses. She is a member of the group, and hopes to donate a significant sum of money for its revitalization effort.

"I can't give $10,000, but I can give $1,000 over the course of a year," Strahley said. "Any business can help by donating a smaller amount like $250. We're getting input from our new businesses, which is refreshing. The beauty of this is that businesses large and small will bring many different viewpoints to the table."

The cash CRC raises will be used as seed money to help the town win grants to revitalize the village. Dean Rizzo, former chairman of the VRTF, has been hired to head the CRC. Rizzo said the money raised by the CRC will be critical for the town to win state, federal and private grants.

"You can't just go to a government agency and ask for $2 million to build new sidewalks," Rizzo said. "But if you've already spent $200,000 on architects' plans, you'll have a good chance of winning a grant because you'll be showing the agency your commitment to doing the project. Having this private seed money will give Cohasset an advantage over other towns competing for the same tax money."

Rizzo added that residents should not fear that the CRC will somehow exclude the public from its planning. The CRC will hold numerous public meetings, and accept comments in writing, by telephone, or in person at its office. All CRC plans and ideas will be submitted to the VRTF for approval.

"The public and the town will be included in the process every step of the way," Rizzo said. "Only the town can apply for public grants. If the town believes that the village needs better streetscapes, flowers, curbs, parking and other improvements, then this corporation can spearhead the effort to get state, federal and private dollars so the town will not have to pay itself. The only way this can succeed is with the consensus of private businesses, residents, town committees and town meeting."

Strahley said she sees the CRC building on the success on previous efforts by residents and town committees. She praised the town's successful efforts over the past year to improve village parking.

Rizzo pointed out that the VRTF is still actively involved in village revitalization. The VRTF recently chose the Cecil Group from Boston to fulfill a $60,000 architectural landscaping contract to improve streetscapes in the village. The Cecil Group's contract contains a stipulation that the company must conduct public meeting and presentations as it develops its plan. Rizzo said all contracts funded by the CRC will contain the same public meeting provision to include the public in the entire planning process.

For Strahley, the CRC provides Cohasset with an important tool for revitalizing Cohasset Village.

"We want more beautification in the village," Strahley said. "We want tourists to come here, and stay all night, and use our restaurants, and shop from store to store. And the public is a big part of this. I have wonderful, loyal customers. Children who rolled my jewelry cases at four-years-old 20 years ago now come in with their own children. This is about building the community. What could be better than that?"

floor of the house was originally a ship chandlery selling marine supplies but eventually became living quarters for Wilson, his wife and their 10 children. Over the years, the first floor has seen use as a tearoom, gift shop, tailor shop and a photography studio. The house was donated to the society in the mid 20th century, and can be seen in the role of the "Eastwick Historical Society" in the movie "Witches of Eastwick."

Though the house isn't decorated with the Wilsons' actual belongings, it does contain period pieces such as a school desk dated near 1800, two-pronged forks as was common in Wilson's time, and other home furnishings. Along with guiding visitors throughout the two-story house, the docents also have to catalogue the objects contained in the house.

Tim Anton, Courtney's brother, also works at the Wilson house. He has, so far, enjoyed his time at the historic house. "It's been great. I've learned a lot of stuff and learned a lot about Cohasset too."

But the one thing Tim, 14, noticed that puzzled him are the visitors from Cohasset, or lack thereof. "It surprises me that nobody comes in here. Most visitors are people just coming through Cohasset, not people from the town that should be interested."

Murphy said that while last year was a busy year, she echoed Tim's thoughts. "Lots of people have visitors from out of town and they go and look around," she said. "Just so many people don't value living in Cohasset and how much history they have in their midst."

She said that is why she likes having local teens work the house. The positions, she says, gives them an appreciation of history while also serving as a résumé builder. Murphy said one of the house's first managers used his experience to help him be accepted into the National Honor Society and put the job experience on his college application.

While visitors take a guided tour, children can color pictures of historical buildings in town or make the tour interactive by filling out a scavenger hunt form.

Murphy said what makes the Wilson house special is how little it has changed. The visible wooden support and cross beams, low doorway leading upstairs, and the slant of the second-floor are all reminders of a time long ago. "It certainly needs some work and renovation," said Murphy, "but you certainly get the feel of the house."

This year's docents are Courtney Anton (manager), Tim Anton, John Downing, Mamme Daley, JoAnna Hamilton, Jessica Wheelwright, and Mary Fegreus. The Captain John Wilson House is open Tuesday through Saturday, 1:30 p.m. to 4:30 p.m. Admission is free but a small donation is suggested.

Surprises in store at Consignment Shop

Prepare for July festivities and summer weddings.

The Cohasset Consignment Shop, Route 3A, Tedeschi Plaza, Cohasset, is open Monday through Saturday, 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. and Sunday, noon to 4 p.m.

In addition to men's and women's shirts, shorts and cotton sweaters from L.L. Bean, Eddie Bauer, Land's End, The Gap, Brooks Bros., Liz Claiborne, Talbot's and Ralph Lauren, there is also an array of sport coats, a tuxedo and men's ties from England and Italy.

Rare, imported wooden puzzles and brain teasers are available as well as a Dutch shuffle board, teak canister and designer beach chair with matching umbrella, all new and many from designer catalogues.

Manager Andi Merrill of Scituate said volunteers are still needed. For more information, call 383-0687.

Proceeds from the shop provide funding for the myriad of services the Social Service League provides for the towns of Norwell, Hull, Hingham, Scituate and Cohasset. League president is Motoko Dean.

Good Samaritan's car, fire truck collide

An unknown gray van traveling southbound on Reservoir Road caused a mishap between a fire truck and a legally parked car, police said.

Francis R. Durkin of Indian Trail in Scituate had stopped to help an injured male in the front yard of a home on Reservoir Road. Durkin parked the 1995 Nissan sedan legally, police said. A Cohasset fire truck, driven by firefighter William Protrulis, with its emergency lights on was attempting to park when an unknown gray van travelling south failed to yield to the emergency vehicle forcing it to cut too close to the Nissan ripping off the car's front fender. The incident occurred at 3:10 p.m., June 22.

There was minor damage to the right rear fender of the fire truck and about $1,000 estimated damage to the Nissan, Safety Officer Rick Yocum said. Yocum said the injured resident had apparently fallen off his lawnmower.

Town tries to get mitigation effort back on track

By Rick Collins
STAFF WRITER

Selectmen sent a letter to Transportation Secretary Kevin Sullivan looking to clarify the current condition of the town's mitigation negotiations with the MBTA.

They also criticized the MBTA calling its recent withdrawal of mitigation offers "unprofessional" and asked for a meeting between the board, Sullivan and Governor Paul Cellucci, a Greenbush commuter train supporter.

On June 9, MBTA liaison Kevin Dasey informed Town Manager Mark Haddad and mitigation committee chairman Tom Gruber that the state's mitigation offer had been pulled off the table. Those items included a new well on Sohier Street; coordinated traffic lights at the intersection of Forest Avenue, North Main Street and King Street; an emergency access bridge for Rocky Lane; and a $100,000 historic preservation fund.

In the letter sent to Sullivan, and signed by all Cohasset selectmen, the board said the town was "dumbfounded" by the MBTA's actions

"How is the town, which has historically taken a cooperative posture with the MBTA, in contrast to the direction taken by other towns, supposed to negotiate in good faith if the MBTA changes rules in mid-stream?"

— Cohasset selectmen

Negotiations between Cohasset and the MBTA were set to begin to discuss an additional 26 mitigation measures the town asked to be considered when Dasey notified the town of the MBTA's desire to back away from the negotiating table.

and asked, "How is the town, which has historically taken a cooperative posture with the MBTA, in contrast to the direction taken by other towns, supposed to negotiate in good faith if the MBTA changes rules in mid-stream?"

Hoping that the MBTA's actions aren't a sign of things to come, Gruber said he is curious about what the next step in the mitigation process is.

"Why should we waste time going through the motions [of negotiating] when they're going to do what they darn well want to do?" he said.

Adding to the quagmire that the Greenbush mitigation issue has becoming, the Scituate Board of Selectmen voted last week to look into filing suit against the MBTA.

Cohasset Selectmen Chairman Tom Callahan, who raised the possibility of Cohasset filing litigation against the MBTA the selectmen's June 20 meeting, called the decision, "very interesting" and said it was something he would personally be interested in looking at.

Town could open door to senior housing

Zoning by-law changes needed

By Rick Collins
STAFF WRITER

The Senior Housing Committee is looking into the possibility of changing current zoning bylaws to allow an "overlay district" or "permitted use" area in order to make more land available for senior housing in Cohasset. The change — that would need town meeting approval — would allow senior housing to be created in any zoning district, providing certain requirements are met.

According to selectman Ronnie McMorris, the town has identified a lack of moderately priced senior housing in town. She said currently, the town does not have multifamily zoning laws, which makes building townhouses or condos for seniors a problem. She said, by changing zoning bylaws — specifically to allow for the creation of housing for some of the town's 1,625 seniors — more potential sites would be identified as possible senior housing locations.

Among sites currently being looked at are a parcel of town-owned land between Red Fox Lane and Stop & Shop off Route 3A, and a 7,000 square foot part of the old Osgood School that won't be used when the new town library is built there on the corner of Sohier Street and Ripley Road.

If Cohasset was to adopt the zoning change, it would not be the first town in the state to do so. Kathryn Palmer, a member of the law firm, Deutsch Williams Brooks DeRensis Holland & Drachman, P.C., that serves as Cohasset town counsel, reported to the committee that similar by-law changes have already been made by towns such as Wellesley, Hudson, Dover, Nantucket and Lexington. Some other towns allow renovation within the existing footprint of a structure, she said.

"We're all of the same mind not of not having one complex in the area. Ideally there would be several of them close to shopping or the town so they have more mobility."

— Dorothy Kelville, senior housing committee

So far, according to Palmer, the changes have been used in Nantucket and Lexington and "senior housing has become very much a part of the fabric of the community."

Senior Housing Committee member Dorothy Keville said the town is looking at a number of different options. "We're all of the same mind not of not having one complex in the area," she said. "Ideally there would be several of them close to shopping or the town so they have more mobility."

"We just want to get a start," said McMorris. "We're looking for more than one solution." McMorris hopes to speak with anyone interested in developing senior housing, whether its private, a church in town looking to develop some of its land or anyone who owns large parcels.

The next Senior Housing Committee meeting is scheduled for August 9. Keville said that Steve DeBrusque of the South Shore Housing Authority will give a presentation outlining what has been done in neighboring towns such as Hanson and Carver. She also said that surveys for town residents 55 and older were distributed in the new Rotary Club phone books. Among the goals of the survey is to identify what type of rental or purchase property town seniors would be able to afford, if they were to move.

CANDIDATES CORNER

Holden offers mitigation insight

In a letter to the Cohasset Selectmen, former Hingham Selectmen Chairman Mike Holden offered his insight on the MBTA's recent tactics. "Like Cohasset, Hingham had worked long and hard with the state to identify and address a host of significant mitigation issues. At 9:30 p.m. on March 1, the MBTA's representatives arrived at Hingham Town Hall and presented me, for the first time, with an agreement to be signed before midnight. The agreement was significantly flawed and failed to provide adequate mitigation for the homes that would be most adversely impacted. Nevertheless, we continued to negotiate in good faith. We did so into the wee hours of the morning. When we suggested negotiations resume after everyone got some sleep, we were informed that we were to sign the agreement then and there. I declined to do so, as did my fellow selectmen. The following day, we were informed 'the offer is off the table.' I imagine that sounds rather familiar to you, not only the very words used, but the tactics." Holden encouraged the selectmen to continue advocating for the people of Cohasset, explaining that Hingham ultimately reached an agreement after he left office which was more protective of the people in Hingham than the offer that had been taken "off the table."

Bradley turns 30

Former Plymouth County Prosecutor and current Democratic Candidate for State Representative Garrett Bradley turned 30 years old on Tuesday, July 4. He started the day by running in the annual road race in Hingham, and then attended the pancake breakfast and Hingham's 4th of July parade with his wife and daughter.

"I am proud to have my birthday on the 4th of July," stated Bradley. "Growing up, I always attended the Hingham parade and watched the spectacular fireworks display sponsored by the Lions Club. I cannot imagine a better way to celebrate my birthday and our nations birthday."

Bradley's mother Deborah said, "Jim and I tell Garrett that having his birthday on the 4th of July is very special, and that his desire to serve the community should continue to be an integral part of his life. We're proud of his dedication to helping others."

Although Bradley enjoyed his birthday over the long holiday, he also worked very hard on the campaign by participating in community events. On Saturday morning, Bradley and his volunteers held signs on Cohasset Common. Sporting campaign T-shirts, Bradley and his family were seen handing out candy and balloons at Hingham's 4th of July activities.

Cantwell at parade

In a strong show of support, an enthusiastic crowd of supporters from Hingham joined State Senate Candidate Jim Cantwell in the annual 4th of July activities in Hingham Square. Cantwell, a former Norfolk County Assistant District Attorney and aide to U.S. Representative William Delahunt, started off the day at 7 a.m. cheering on runners and supporters in Hingham's annual 4th of July road race and then greeted parade goers at 10 a.m.. A group of Cantwell supporters ran the 4.2-mile course clad in maroon and gold Cantwell for State Senate T-shirts. Cantwell supporters also handed out maroon and gold balloon along the parade route.

In other news from the campaign trail, the endorsements continue to line up for Cantwell. Last week, Cantwell received the endorsement of the Plumbers & Gasfitters Local 12 Union. "We are pleased to endorse your candidacy," said Business Manager Kevin Cotter. "I am confident you will be successful and I trust you will represent the interest of the working men and women subsequent to your election to office."

Band concerts

The Cohasset Recreation Department's first concert on the common for the 2000 season is scheduled for Tuesday, July 11, at 7:30 p.m. on the Cohasset Common.

Performing will be the 30-piece South Shore Concert band under the direction of Richard P. Whitmarsh

Concerts are available via the generosity of the South Shore Playhouse Associates Inc. of Cohasset and a matching fund grant from the American Federation of Musicians of New York City, N.Y.

Concerts are fee of charge and the public is invited. Please bring your own lawn chair or blanket and from time to time insect repellent can be a good item to have available.

Craft workshops

Buttonwood Books will hold craft workshops for children Tuesdays and Thursdays at 10 a.m. in its stores in Cohasset and Hingham. Children ages 4-7 will meet Tuesday, July 18, for Alex Lacing Friends and July 25 for Chenille Stems. Children ages 8-12 will meet Thursday, July 20, for Metallic Bead Creatures and July 27 for Iron On Creations (bring a T-shirt to decorate. Free, but pre-registration is required. Youth theater heats up in summer

Local groups light up South Shore stages

By Seth Jacobson
STAFF WRITER

Some kids go to camp for the summer.

Some kids play sports.

But for aspiring young actors, summer theatre programs are all the rage. And South Shore kids are especially fortunate to have several youth theater stages on which to perform.

According to area youth theater group directors, a summer theater experience offers kids something they cannot get anywhere else..

Doug Trudeau of Scituate is the director of Showstoppers which puts on full scale productions on a yearly basis, but also involves itself in hosting summer youth theater sessions. Trudeau's group is staging the classic "Hello Dolly" next weekend at Marshfield's Furnace Brook School.

Trudeau said there are more than 100 children from all over the South Shore enrolled in his program this summer, 93 of which are performers. The remainder are involved in technical aspects of staging the production.

"Theater is a fabulous outlet for these kids," Trudeau said. "It builds confidence in young people regardless of what career path they are thinking about for the future. Theater teaches them communication skills, and it helps build of a great deal of confidence. It also gives kids a chance to do something that they wouldn't normally do during the school year."

Trudeau said during his years of experience with working with children and adults, he has found that one of people's primary fears is speaking in public, and he said theater really helps overcome that obstacle.

"With a good theater experience, kids can expect to alleviate that fear as they pass into adulthood. Again, whether a child is thinking about being a doctor, a lawyer, or whatever, they need to be able to speak eloquently and communicate efficiently. Here, they are learning life-long lessons."

Kidspot performers Kira Mathis and Kimberly Gaughan share a hug during the Family Performing Arts Center holiday production "The Best Christmas Pageant Ever." FPAC hosts two different summer youth programs each year — Kidspot for ages 7-12 and Teenspot for ages 12-20.

"Theater is a fabulous outlet for these kids. It builds confidence in young people regardless of what career path they are thinking about for the future. Theater teaches them communication skills, and it helps build of a great deal of confidence. It also gives kids a chance to do something that they wouldn't normally do during the school year."

Trudeau said acting is not the only aspect kids learn. They also learn about stage design, set building, painting, and all the other facets of theater work. He said they also learn about the concept of teamwork.

Trudeau said he enjoys hosting the children each summer because he likes seeing the finished product, the production itself.

"Kids love having a good experience, meeting new friends, and learning about themselves," he said. "They can do all of those things here."

The 13 members of the Symphony Swing Band also perform in the Plymouth Philharmonic Orchestra and the Cape Cod Symphony.

A thing for swing

By Seth Jacobson
STAFF WRITER

For George Scharr, 46, of Falmouth, it's all about swinging the night away.

Scharr is the leader and founder of the recently formed Symphony Swing Band, a musical synthesis of the Cape (Cod) Symphony and the Plymouth Philharmonic Orchestra. He plays trombone in the swing band. The swing band is made up of 13 musicians, most of whom play with both orchestras.

"The band plays legendary music from in one of America's true musical styles," Scharr said. "That style is swing, which is sort of an offshoot of Jazz."

Scharr said swing is a type of music which became immensely popular in the late 1930s, and remained popular until the late 1940s. Although the popularity of swing music remained stationary for a long time after that time period, it came back in the 90s with the arrival of new swing-style bands like The Brian Setzer Orchestra and the Cherry Poppin' Daddies.

Scharr said although many people think the term "swing" was derived from a "swinging" style of dance, that's not the case. The term for the music came from the rearrangement, or "swinging" of musical notes.

The seeds to start a local swing band were planted years ago, said Scharr. After he graduated from the New England Conservatory of Music in Boston, Scharr began playing trombone on the big band circuit, and he traveled around the country performing with bands incorporating many styles of music.

"You name it, I've played it," he said.

"When I'm playing swing music, I feel like that's exactly what I was put on this planet to do."

George Scharr, founder of the Symphony Swing Band

Eventually, traveling around wore on Scharr, so he settled in Marshfield, and then later moved to Cape Cod. By joining both the Cape Cod Symphony and the Plymouth Philharmonic Orchestra, Scharr is able to be a part of the best on the local music scene. While with the orchestras he plays mostly classical, Scharr continued to sneak in the occasional swing gig.. It was a college dance five years ago that changed Scharr's musical agenda for the future.

"We played the college dance as a Jazz quintet," Scharr said, "and we were playing swing music that night. When I looked and saw the audience we were playing for, I thought we were going to bomb for sure. But from the moment we started to play, these kids dance,

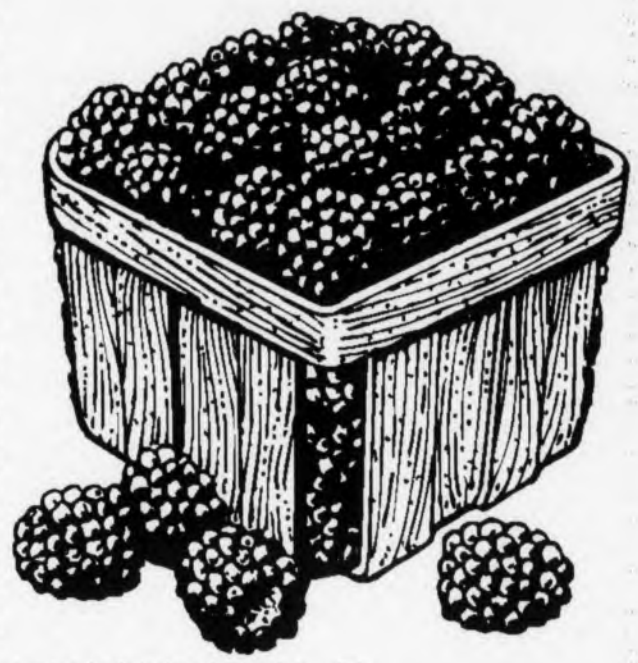
Rich, Fresh Fruit Cobbler

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL



It is sometimes hard to improve on nature whether it is the divine perfume from a ripe peach or the first crisp bite of a just-picked Macoun apple but a good fruit cobbler is as close as the home cook gets to divine inspiration. The marriage of slightly sweetened, baked summer fruit with a dough topping is both classic and extraordinary. The problem comes when the fruit is too sweet, too heavily spiced, too thick and the topping is too doughy or too chewy.

First, the fruit has to be ripe. You can make a decent cobbler from second-rate fruit but never a great one. I have also tested a variety of optional ingredients including ginger, lemon rind, and vanilla and find that simple fruit and sugar work best with just a touch of lemon juice. Thickening is another matter. One usually needs some thickener otherwise the fruit mixture will be too loose and thin. I find that just one tablespoon of Minute Tapioca works best, having also tested flour, corn starch, and arrowroot. Flour and corn starch are too gluey, masking the taste of the fruit. Arrowroot works well, but is too expensive. By the way, use a full 10 cups of fruit, not the meager 4 called for in some recipes. It takes little extra time, fits a standard 2 quart baking dish, and you are unlikely to have leftovers.

Cobblers are usually topped with a simple biscuit dough (they can also be topped with pie pastry or a cookie dough) which puffs up light and tender, the perfect foil for the syrupy juices. However, the problem with biscuit dough is that it is often too much of a good thing, the fluffy biscuits overpowering the fruit. In addition, biscuit dough has relatively little fat in it which makes a bit too chewy in contrast to the tender, baked fruit. I was looking for a richer topping, one that was less like bread and more like dessert.

I started with my own family recipe which consists of flour, butter, Crisco, buttermilk, baking powder, baking soda, and salt. It was good but I wanted a richer, softer topping. I started by increasing the amount of shortening 50 percent to 6 tablespoons butter and 4 tablespoons Crisco. To make the dough even richer and more tender, I also added one egg yolk. Finally, I increased the sugar to 1/4 cup. Now I had a rich cobbler topping that really felt like dessert. (I also decided to substitute milk for buttermilk since the latter is sometimes hard to find.)

The secret to this recipe, however, is how the dough is handled. Instead of baking the topping on the fruit for the entire cooking time, I start off with just the fruit in a 375 degree oven and then added the topping after 15 minutes, increasing the oven temperature to 425 degrees. This allows the fruit extra time to cook, concentrating the juices while not overbaking the dough. It is also best to cut the dough into shapes before topping the fruit since the dough is too soft to handle in large pieces. Rounds or stars work well. You can use any simple cookie cutter shape you like.

MASTER RECIPE FOR FRUIT COBBLER

If you only have an 8-inch square pan, use 6 cups of fruit; a 9 x 11-inch pan can take a full 10 cups. If the fruit is not particularly juicy, you can eliminate the Minute Tapioca altogether.

Fruit Mixture
10 cups fruit
Juice of half a lemon
1/2 teaspoon lemon rind, minced (optional)
1/2 to 3/4 cup sugar
1 tablespoon Minute Tapioca

Cobbler Dough
2 cups flour
1/2 teaspoon salt
1 tablespoon baking powder
1/4 cup sugar
6 tablespoons butter, chilled
4 tablespoons vegetable shortening (Crisco), chilled
3/4 cup milk
1 egg yolk
1 tablespoon sugar for sprinkling
Heavy cream or vanilla ice cream for serving

1. Preheat oven to 375 degrees. Prepare fruit (wash, peel, hull, core, etc.) and cut into bite-size pieces if necessary. Make sure that fruit is well-drained. Toss fruit with lemon juice, optional rind, sugar, and tapioca. Pour fruit into a 2 quart baking dish.

2. In the bowl of a food processor, combine the first four ingredients of the cobbler dough recipe (flour through sugar) and pulse for 2 seconds to mix. Then add the cold butter and vegetable shortening and process in 1-second bursts until flour is slightly yellow in color and the texture of coarse meal. This will take 10 to 12 bursts. (This can also be done by hand in a large bowl. Whisk together the dry ingredients and then cut in shortening with a pastry blender or two knives.)

3. Whisk together the milk and egg yolk. Transfer flour mixture to a large bowl and gradually add two thirds of the milk mixture, mixing with a rubber spatula. If necessary, add more of the milk mixture so that the dough holds together easily in a ball. (If you need additional milk, go ahead and add it.) Now lightly press dough together into a rough ball. The dough will be extremely soft.

4. Place dish with fruit mixture into oven. Bake for 10 minutes, and then toss fruit with a large spoon. Meanwhile, roll out dough to a size slightly smaller than the baking dish. Cut into rounds, squares, or triangles. When fruit has cooked for a total of 15 minutes, remove from oven. Top fruit with dough shapes. Sprinkle dough with sugar.

5. Raise oven to 425 degrees. Bake for an additional 20 minutes or until dough is browned and fruit is bubbly and tender. Allow to cool for 30 minutes before serving with heavy cream or vanilla ice cream.

The guys who made 'Chicken' run

By Ed Symkus
CNC SENIOR ARTS WRITER

If memory serves, "Chicken Run" is the first major motion picture to use the word "chicken" in its title since Don Knotts starred in "The Ghost and Mr. Chicken." It's definitely the first feature film to spring from the fertile minds of British model animators Nick Park and Peter Lord, the folks who have previously given us a trio of Wallace & Gromit shorts.

"Chicken Run" tells the comedic — often darkly comedic — story of the resident fowls at Tweedy's Egg Farm, and how they come to realize that if they don't produce enough eggs for the wicked Mrs. Tweedy, they'll most likely become her dinner. Things get worse when she decides to convert the operation into a chicken pie company, pretty much guaranteeing the chickens' fates. Enter a renegade hero, the slick, vain Rocky, who says he'll help everyone escape if they hide him from the folks.

Viewers might be spoiled by the technical advances in recent computer-generated animation, but the stop-motion, one frame at a time technique used here — miles above what Gumby had to offer — is just as stunning to watch.

"I'm a great admirer of 'Toy Story' and that kind of thing," says Park. "But I think we have an advantage, in that people are less familiar with this more conventional technique. I'm hoping it'll be a phenomenon. People won't have seen this kind of expression before on the big screen."

"I suppose the technology is relevant," adds Lord. "But this puppet [he points to the actual Plasticine figure of Rocky], with all the research and time that went into building it, represents thousands and thousands of pounds. But having said that, the bit that does all the really interesting stuff — the face and the hands — is actually made of modeling clay and is incredibly simple. So maybe because we've been at this for 20-odd years, we have confidence with the material, and the changing of technology hasn't made much difference [to us]. The computer thing is interesting. I just hope and believe that the world is big enough to have different strands co-existing."

Park and Lord have broken a lot of ground over the past decade at the British animation studio Aardman. Oscars have gone to the short "Creature Comforts" and the two Wallace & Gromit shorts, "The Wrong Trousers" and "A Close Shave." Park has also received the Commander of the British Empire honor from the queen, who happens to be a Wallace & Gromit fan. But even more important, their work caught the eye of Jeffrey Katzenberg well before he became one of the founders of DreamWorks, which released "Chicken Run."

"When Jeffrey was still at Disney, he asked us if we wanted to do a feature, but we never successfully signed anything," says Park. "And when Jeffrey became DreamWorks, by then he kind of realized that creative control was really important to us. We met up in L.A. with Jeffrey and Steven [Spielberg] and they wanted to hear our idea. And it was like talking to filmmakers and it became very attractive to us to do a feature with them. We loved the way they spoke. They wanted us to make an Aardman movie. They didn't want to change any of the quality of what we do."

"They were very respectful," recalls Lord. "The ground rules were that we didn't want to make a conventional Hollywood studio animated film, and they didn't want to either. They came to us for what we do that's different. And then they gave us a free hand. We had a good idea and a good first draft. Plus we had the Wallace & Gromit stuff to show them and that was great for credibility. If there was some question about accents or things being too colloquial or very British, we could say, 'Well it worked in Wallace & Gromit. Trust us.' And they did that."

Park and Lord spent about 4 1/2 years on "Chicken Run." On their earlier films, they worked as model makers and animators and directors. This time out, due to the immensity of the project, it had to be different.

"It was quite painful for Pete and I because we had to withdraw from doing the animation in a hands-on way, and let other people do it, and direct them. It's been great to stand back and direct, and I don't feel any loss of control which is what I feared the most. But everybody's worked diligently in the style we've used before. We always worried about how can you kind of industrialize such a personal style. But I think we've done it. There were 30 animators working on it. Pete and I had 30 different sets to direct every day, 30 different scenes on the film. We would split them between us, so Pete would direct 15 animators and I would direct 15 animators."

Of course there's more than just painstaking frame-by-frame animation involved in this film. There was a good deal of work with the actors, including Mel Gibson, Miranda Richardson and Julia Sawalha.

"Voice work started about three years ago," says Lord. "Then, just like in any other form of filmmaking, as you go along, your ideas change. It's easy on the set [of a live film] to come in and say that you have a new page today and to do this. But with us you have to get the actors and record it, so a new page is always a major issue. We had to go back to most of the actors about 10 times over the whole production to do pick-ups."

And once the animation part started, the artists were given all kinds of freedom. Among the inhabitants it's quite amusing to see how often each character blinks.

"Animators are trained to animate things and they find it very hard to resist doing things like blinking," explains Park. "It may take two days to do a three-second shot. And the animator thinks, 'Oh, I haven't made this character blink all afternoon.' So they stick another blink in. But it's actually only been a second since they last blinked."

Nick Park makes "Chicken Run" one frame at a time.

Park and Lord both admit to just a bit of computer intervention in the film.

"We generally leave computers to do the things we can't do with Plasticine, like big gravy explosions or flames or smoke," says Park. "But the computer people were trying to be complementary to our process. For example, on the gravy, they took the texture of Plasticine and wrapped it around the gravy, so that it fitted into our world.

"I think there's now a gravy program you can buy," he adds, laughing.

So if this film is a hit, will Park and Lord consider doing a Wallace & Gromit feature?

"Oh yeah, but not the next one, unfortunately," says Park. "After this I just need a break. Pete and I have had chickens on the brain for the last four years. We've got a five-picture deal with DreamWorks, and we've got one about 'The Tortoise and the Hare' already up and running. We haven't got a good title for it yet, but it's a kind of Aardman version of the story, which means you can expect anything."

"Chicken Run" opens nationally on June 23.

Youth theater heats up in summer

porates two youth summer theater programs. One of the groups called "Kidspot" is for ages 7-12, and "Teenspot" is for ages 12-20. This summer, Kidspot will be doing a production of Chitty-Chitty Bang Bang, and Teenspot will be doing Superman the Musical. FPAC stages many of its performances at Duxbury High School.

Like Trudeau, Mafera loves her job and loves seeing the kids in action.

"There are a lot of kids who are talented in terms of doing sports and other activities," she said. "But there's a whole other faction of kids who love doing activities like theater. One of my favorite things about my job is seeing all these kids working together towards a common goal. And theater is the kind of thing where all these kids get their chance to shine whether they enjoy dancing, singing, or acting. They all get their moment."

Like Trudeau, Mafera tries to get the young actors involved in all aspects of theater and she sometimes recruits adults for cameo appearances in shows.

"One of my favorite things about my job is seeing all these kids working together towards a common goal. And theater is the kind of thing where all these kids get their chance to shine whether they enjoy dancing, singing, or acting. They all get their moment."

Meri-Lee Mafera, director of the Family Performing Arts Center

"Bringing all ages together is something which I think is just a wonderful thing to do," she said. "I love seeing those relationships develop."

Based in Plymouth, Dreamchasers is another local theater group with yet another summer youth program. Director Rosann M. Weeks runs the program year-round but during the summer she works with children from ages 7-18. Weeks instructs children in acting, playwriting, singing, choreography and the technical side of theatrical productions. There are about 30 youngsters enrolled in Dreamchasers summer program this year. The group rehearses and performs at the Norwell Grange.

"Every one of these children is gifted," she said. "For them, doing theater makes them feel better about themselves, and allows them to express themselves verbally." Like other directors, Weeks said the theater experience helps build up a great deal of self confidence.

"Some of these kids come in so shy that they can't even look you in the eye," Weeks said. "Theater changes all that, and that's the best part of this whole thing in my experience. That is why I do this job. I love seeing that happen."

SOUTH SHORE REAL ESTATE

Association of Realtors awards reception

The South Shore Association of Realtors (SSAR) held their annual award ceremonies recently at Amelia's, Marina Bay, Quincy. SSAR president Joyce I. Baker announced that this year's recipient of the Realtor of the Year 2000 award is Joseph P. Clancy, owner of Century 21 Tullish & Clancy Real Estate, Inc. A commemorative plaque was presented by Patricia Sullivan, the 1999 award recipient. Clancy received the recognition for his outstanding service and contribution to the real estate profession, as well as to the South Shore Association of Realtors. A Board member since 1973 and a Life Member since 1998, he is a past Director of the Board, former Grievance Committee member, and currently serves on the Budget and Finance and Professional Standards Committees, and Multiple Listing Service. Under Joe Clancy's enthusiastic leadership, the Century 21 Tullish & Clancy Real Estate Company has thrived for 27 years as a successful business in the communities of Quincy and Weymouth, and has achieved Centurion status in the Century 21 system for the past three years. Clancy's community associations include membership in Weymouth Rotary, sponsoring youth soccer and basketball, Quincy Knights of Columbus and Golf League, and the South Shore Chamber of Commerce. More than 125 people joined in the celebration including Clancy's wife Geraldine, their sons and daughters and spouses, several other family members, many friends within and without the real estate business, his office associates, several of whom are longstanding associates of more than 15 years, and SSAR board staff. He was feted as a dedicated family man, past coach of his son's little league teams, generously and patiently sharing his experience and guidance to everyone in his life, all the while maintaining his wonderful sense of humor.

Joseph Clancy, 2000 Realator of the year receives his plaque from Patricia Sullivan, 1999 Realator of the year.

As the South Shore Association of Realtors 2000 Realtor of the year, Clancy's name will be placed in nomination for receipt of the Massachusetts Realtor of the Year Award to be presented in September at the Massachusetts Association of Realtors Convention to be held in North Falmouth.

The SSAR Affiliate of the Year 2000 was awarded to Bank of America representatives Brian Maloney and Michael King. Attorney Thomas Williams, the 1999 award recipient, presented the plaque as a testimonial of recognition to Bank of America in deep appreciation for outstanding contribution to the South Shore Association of Realtors. Many of Maloney's and King's families, friends and office associates were in attendance to help celebrate. The honor was accepted for ongoing support throughout their years of SSAR membership beginning in 1996, and for their generous sponsorship to board activities and celebrations such as holiday galas, affiliate breakfasts, Realtor after Hours gatherings and annual meetings. Their continuing participation in socials like softball and summer cookouts, and the Realtor's Habitat for Humanity birdhouse project and judging are always made more successful due to Bank of America's donations of time and energy, their reliability, and their financial support. Bank of America's strong advocacy of affordable housing is recognized in their work with local housing authorities and organizations promoting education and guidance toward fair housing for all.

The South Shore Association of Realtors is one of more than 1,800 associations that comprise the National Association of Realtors and is the "Voice for Real Estate" throughout the South Shore.

Is homeowner liable when machines malfunction?

By Anthony Summers

Ironically, the machines we have created to serve us, also lurk menacingly among the thorns and hidden dangers of the world.

When our household machines are misused or malfunction, and cause injury, the crucial question is: who pays for the damage caused? Will it be the machine manufacturer, the user, or some other third party?

The Appeals Court case of Lewis vs. Ariens Company deals what happens when the homeowner's friend, the common snow-blower, turns on its owner.

Background

In 1966, Ariens Company (Defendant) manufactured and sold a snow-blower to its first owner. In 1982, John Lewis, (Plaintiff) purchased the very same snow-blower from the sister of a friend of his wife. It's unclear whether the Seller was the first owner.

In 1992, 10 years later, while operating the machine, Lewis lost his footing on ice, and his hand slipped into the discharge chute where the impeller blade sheared off four fingers of his right hand. Lewis brought an action against Ariens alleging:

(1) Breach of warranty of merchantability and (2) Violation of Chapter 93A, the fraudulent and deceptive practice act. (MGL chapter 93A allows the plaintiff to recover up to triple damages, attorney's fees and loss.)

At trial, the following evidence was introduced:

1. The snow-blower was manufactured and sold new in 1966. 2. MGL chapter 93A was not enacted into law until 1968. 3. Shortly after 1966, studies were published demonstrating various dangers in the snow-blower design. 4. In 1972, Ariens added an "engine kill type of dead man's control that made the snow blower safer, but never recalled those that were already in the stream of commence." 5. When first sold (in 1966) the snow-blower came with printed operating instructions that began with safety warnings, the first of which was: "stop engine before cleaning discharge, removing obstacles, making adjustments, or when leaving operating positions."

Discussion of law

Most machinery (snow-blowers included) come with an implied warranty of merchantability insuring that they will be reasonably safe for the intended reasonably foreseeable use. Manufacturers of snow-blowers also have a continuing duty to warn users, even after the sale of the product. Usually, the manufacture's duty to warn terminates once the machine is resold by the first purchaser.

Decision

Although there is no requirement that the user of a product also be the purchaser from the defendant manufacturer, the manufacturer will not be liable unless the injured party is a person whom might reasonably to expected to use the product.

However, a person who buys a machine secondhand is a member of a universe too diffuse and too large for manufacturers of original equipment to identify. This court was not prepared to adopt a general rule requiring a manufacturer to update warnings to purchases of products secondhand.

Although Lewis could recover on breach of warranty of merchantability theory, he loses on the 93A count for multiple damages and attorney's fees, and costs, since Ariens had no obligation to warn Lewis as a second-hand purchaser.

Legal advice

The best advice I can give is to keep your hand out of the snow blower discharge chute, especially when the engine is running. Whatever money you might recover, it can never compensate for a lost hand. Although designed for snow removal, when used improperly, a snow-blower can remove fingers as well as snow.

First Cliff in Scituate

Located in one of this picturesque seaside town's finest locations, this lovely home is just a walk to beaches, harbor shops and boating.

Direct ocean views greet visitors from most rooms of this spacious custom Cape. Sliding glass doors in family room lead to a deck overlooking rolling lawns and the sea, enhanced by the smell of salt air and beach roses.

There are nine large rooms including a master bedroom or in-law suite with a 25-by-21-ft. bedroom plus glass-walled study and full bath. There are three additional good-sized bedrooms and another two full baths.

The kitchen is a true family gathering area with its wonderful views, hardwood floors and ample space for dining. There is also a formal dining room and a sunny, bright living room with bay window and a fireplace for cozy winter evenings. Other amenities include a first-floor laundry room and an attached two-car garage.

It is very unusual to find such a generous lot of land (35,169 sq. ft.) in a prime ocean proximity location. The site is lovely and provides plenty of room for flowers and a vegetable garden.

This is a home and lifestyle to enjoy for many years.

Workshop set for first time homebuyers

Quincy Neighborhood Housing Services, an approved First Time Homebuyer Counseling Agency, will be holding an accredited and MHFA certified First Time Homebuyer's Workshop in collaboration with Fleet Mortgage Saturday, July 14 and 21. The workshop will be held at The Fleet Bank, 1400 Hancock St., Quincy Center, from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. Attendance at both workshops is mandatory to receive your homebuying certificate which is mandatory by all lenders to qualify for the many different mortgage options such as the Mass. Housing Finance Agency, Soft Second Programs, down payment and closing cost grants and other special first time homebuyer financing options.

Neighborhood Housing Services is a non-profit organization dedicated to assisting first time buyers through the homebuying process. The staff at NHS is unique in their approach to obtaining down payment and closing costs assistance as well as rehab grants for their clients, which are available throughout the entire South Shore area. Don't miss this opportunity to find out how you or someone you know can buy a home with little or no money down.

The agenda will be comprehensive and individualized. The focus will be on the many changing aspects of homebuying, including how to locate a property within your budget, how to make an offer, and determining the best mortgage program for your needs. Advanced registration is required and space is limited. A $10 refundable registration fee is required.

Call Debbie Kidd at (617) 770-2227 for more information and to register for this workshop.

Shasta is a neutered Husky male who is 7 years young. Shasta's owners have moved out of state he could not go with them. We took him in. He knows 'sit' and 'down'. He gets along fine with other dogs but is not good with cats. He grew up with children. Shasta is extremely affectionate and loves attention. He is generally mellow, but likes to play and is a great walking partner.

A thing for swing

whooped, and hollered. They went ballistic when they heard the (swing) music."

After the college gig, Scharr's wheels started turning.

"I was walking near the (Cape Cod) canal, and I realized with both orchestras, I had all the elements to put a swing band together," Scharr said. "And what was even better was that I had been playing with a lot of these people (in the two orchestras) for a long time." Scharr said he has played with the Plymouth orchestra for about 20 years and the Cape orchestra for approximately six years.

He approached members of both the Plymouth and the Cape orchestras, and presented the idea of starting a swing band. Last fall, his idea came to life when he had all 13 members of his new band in place playing four saxophones, three trumpets, three trombones, one guitar, a bass guitar, and drums.

Scharr said the band plays many corporate gigs, grand openings, weddings, and other functions. The band has also played gigs on the town green in Hyannis, the Barnstable Performing Arts Center, and even Plymouth's Memorial Hall.

Scharr said one of his favorite aspects of the swing band is that it has the ability to break down into smaller bands and play different style of music. For instance, Scharr can transform the swing band into a classical entourage, a Dixie band, a Jazz trio, a brass quintet or even a church group.

So far, Scharr said audiences have been responding extremely well to his unique musical venture.

"It's very much like sports," he said. "You know if you're going to be a success or a failure right off the bat."

When it comes to playing gigs, Scharr said the swing band mainly has one job.

"It's all about maintaining the pulse of the party," he said, "and allowing as little silence as possible between musical numbers. As a band, we have to be ready to improvise or make up an instant medley."

Among the swing band's scorching musical numbers are classic tunes like "Tequila," "I Love the Nightlife," "On the Road Again," "Satin Doll," "String of Pearls," "You Made me Love You," and many more.

"There's a lot of things that make the band unique. It's really a way of area symphony orchestras breaking into a commercial market. After all, we all are classically trained musicians. But with this band, we also have the chance to bring all kinds of music into the dance halls."

George Scharr, founder of the Symphony Swing Band

"There's a lot of things that make the band unique," Scharr said. "It's really a way of area symphony orchestras breaking into a commercial market. After all, we all are classically trained musicians. But with this band, we also have the chance to bring all kinds of music into the dance halls."

When it comes to what makes a good piece of music, Scharr said "I think Duke Ellington said it best when he said 'If it sounds good, it is good.'"

"We really play for ourselves, because we're doing it 90 nights out of every year and we're always trying to do the best job we can. Hopefully, it will sound good enough to everyone. When I'm playing swing music, I feel like that's exactly what I was put on this planet to do."

Gum as a gift?

Ask George

By George Hobica
COPLEY NEWS SERVICE

George Hobica

Q. I'll be visiting friends in Singapore this summer. What would be an appropriate gift to bring their teen-age children?

A. Believe it or not, chewing gum and lots of it. Although the act of chewing gum isn't illegal in Singapore, chewing gum itself isn't readily available since the government frowns on its use (too many unsightly wads squished into the sidewalks of the squeaky clean city-state).

So, head for a discount warehouse and load up. Even if your friends' kids don't like chewing gum, they probably know someone who does.

Q. Are there any secure facilities to leave luggage at JFK airport for up to three days? If so how much does it cost?

A. There's a baggage storage facility in terminal 4E between gates 11 and 12, (718) 656-8617. They charge anywhere from $7 to $15 per day to store your bag - the price depends on the size of your suitcase. They are open 7 a.m. to 10 p.m., and require a picture ID to reclaim your bags.

Q. Is it possible to verify whether a flight was truly canceled or delayed as a result of weather conditions? I had a client who recently lost a $480 room in Grand Cayman and spent an additional $125 on a room in Miami as a result of what the airlines called a weather-related delay.

A. A very good question, but one without a simple answer. One way is to call the departure and arrival airports in question (most have public information lines) and ask them whether there were any weather-related delays or unusual weather conditions on your client's date of travel or the day before, since delays can cascade from one day to the next. You can also get weather reports online at www.weather.com.

Another way would have been to see if flights on other airlines were canceled that day (not just your client's flight). You would also have to check where your client's plane came from that day to see if a weather delay in a city visited by the plane earlier in the day caused "ripple effect" cancellations. So, it can get complicated.

I know a lot of flyers suspect that airlines cancel flights on a whim and then blame it on weather, but I don't think that happens too often.

Q. I flew on TWA with a connection through St. Louis (I bought the ticket through Best Fares Travel Club). On our way home we were delayed two hours due to severe weather conditions in St. Louis. Then the pilot announced that an engine blew out and told us to disembark. It took an additional six hours to fix it.

TWA did not keep us informed nor did they offer food coupons unless passengers asked. Most of us felt they were very insensitive to their passengers' needs.

As a result of the delays, we were going to miss our connecting flight in St. Louis, so I asked if we could head out the next day. But they said there were no seats and they suggested we wait for the repair, fly to St. Louis and stay overnight, taking the earliest connecting flight the following morning to our final destination.

I asked if there would be a hotel room available in St. Louis, and was informed they couldn't book one in advance. When we finally got into St. Louis at 1:30 a.m., we were told that no hotels were available, so we had no choice but to wait at the airport overnight.

What recourse do I have with TWA or Best Fares?

A. What a mess! Unfortunately, airlines aren't required by law to provide any kind of accommodations in circumstances like these; it's all voluntary. Usually, they'll do something for you if it's a mechanical delay, but if it's weather or anything else beyond their reasonable control, they're pretty stingy.

I'm surprised that TWA didn't offer to put you on another airline. That might have been because your discounted Best Fares ticket was a special fare that is only good on the issuing airline. Most "published" fare tickets can be transferred to another airline in case of delay, but consolidator and some other cheapo tickets can't, which is one reason travelers need to be wary when they buy one.

In any event, you'll only get what you ask for. I don't think complaining to Best Fares would do much good since it wasn't really their fault; you're better off writing a concise, firm, but polite letter to TWA's customer service department. Ask for a free ticket or a coupon or a substantial discount on a future flight.

Cohasset turned out Monday to honor one of its own. More than 1,500 local citizens attended a memorial service under the Big Top at the Music Circus in honor of Clark Chatterton who succumbed to cancer last week at the age of 58.

While many fought back tears during the two-hour ceremony – remembrances that were shared focused on the joy that Chatterton, known for his positive personality and generosity of spirit, brought to so many lives.

"He touched all of us in a way none of us will ever forget," said Mike Gill, social health director at the middle-high school where Chatterton was at teacher and athletic director for decades.

Townspeople also honored Chatterton — who was named Citizen of the Year in January — just six weeks ago with a special

Town plots game plan

Wants leverage to use with MBTA

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

In an attempt to establish some leverage in negotiating with the MBTA about the restoration of the Greenbush commuter line, Cohasset selectmen are mulling over a number of strategies, including the possibility of rezoning the rail bed as recreational space, which would then require a two-thirds vote by the state legislature to allow the state to seize the land.

The town also hopes to strengthen its bargaining position through preparation and education. Citing a lack of knowledge on part of the town, mitigation committee chairman Thomas Gruber recommended to selectmen Tuesday night that the town should consider finding someone knowledgeable in railroad real property laws and railroad engineering issues, as well as confer with other towns in the Old Colony Line, such as Kingston and

Two-family home status questioned

Ruling could set a precedent

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

The zoning board may have opened the proverbial "can of worms" this week that could affect the status of existing two-family homes around town.

At issue is whether an apartment created in a single-family house, which is used for family members that are part of the same household, qualifies as a two-family use under the zoning by-law.

Also, in question is whether a non-conforming, two-family house can keep its "grandfathered" status if it wasn't being used as a two-family dwelling within two years of the time that the by-law was modified.

Acting on a complaint from a neighbor, building inspector Robert Egan recently notified Aaron Hassan, the landlord of the house at 15 Arrowwood Road, that he was in violation of the zoning by-law if he continued to use the house as a two-family dwelling.

"When I was asked to interpret it, the fact your family lived in a house with two kitchens does not constitute a two-family."

— Bob Egan, building inspector

The zoning board heard Hassan's appeal of the building inspector's decision at a hearing Monday.

Cohasset gets high water marks

Local beaches pass the test

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Health effects related to swimming in polluted waters include ear infections, conjunctivitis and rashes, but the most common ailment are gastro-intestinal disorders, stemming from tendencies by swimmers to swallow water.

The board of health will once again routinely test the waters of Cohasset for dangerous bacteria levels this summer, but what it will be looking for is different.

Traditionally, the five swimming spots in town – the Cohasset Sailing Club, which is across from Bassing Beach in Scituate, the Cohasset Yacht Club, Sandy Cove, Black Rock Beach and Sandy Beach – will have water samples analyzed in a lab, but not for fecal coliform levels any more.

According to town health agent Dr. Joseph Godzik, the new red flag in the water will be high enterococci levels. "Fecal coliform has never really been associated with health risks," said Godzik. "The Environmental Protection Agency and other groups feel, and rightly so, that testing for fecal coliforms is pretty useless. It doesn't really tell you about the health risks."

Godzik said tests have shown that high levels of enterococci is a better indicator of health risks in saline-type waters. In fresh-type waters, such as reservoirs, lakes or ponds, health officials test for high-levels of e.coli bacteria.

He said that the once the water samples are taken, they are sent to a laboratory and allowed to propagate. Godzik said that if more than 104 colonies of bacteria per 100 milliliters have grown on the culture, the water is deemed polluted. Health effects related to swimming in polluted waters include ear infections, conjunctivitis and rashes, but Godzik said the most common ailment are gastro-intestinal disorders, stemming from tendencies by swimmers to swallow water.

According to last week's round of testing, all Cohasset beaches had approximately 10 colonies, except for the sample taken from Cohasset Harbor, which had a count of 60. Godzik said it is not unusual for the harbor to have a significantly higher count than the rest of the town's beaches for two reasons. The first is that boaters still tend to empty their holding tanks into the harbor, and not use the available disposal station in front of the pier near the harbormaster's office. The other reason is that some sewerage comes from the sewer plant itself. He also said bacteria levels at any beach in the town is also affected by storm water runoff.

South Main St. section to close

Sewer work near Summer St. slated

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Ground contamination from gasoline will force the town to shut down part of South Main Street from July 17-21 in order to finish sewer work in the area, according to Police Chief Brian Noonan.

South Main Street — between Summer Street and the Paul Pratt Library — will be closed 24 hours a day during the work, in order to fit in the extra equipment needed, police chief Brian Noonan said.

Workers for contractor J. D'Amico Inc., originally discovered the contamination on Oct. 28, while digging a trench between St. Anthony's Catholic Church at the corner of South Main and Summer streets near the site of the Cohasset Service Center, a former gas station. Work was immediately halted as town engineers, Tutela Engineering, developed a game plan to deal with the problem.

Starting July 17, the trenches will be re-dug and sewer pipes laid. According to Tutela president Domenic Tutela, a treatment truck will be at the location to cleanse any groundwater that is found in the Town hall painting

Town Manager Mark Haddad told selectmen at the board's meeting Tuesday that he will file an article for Town Meeting asking for between $22-25,000 for the repainting of Town Hall. Haddad said it has been eight years since the building was last scraped down and repainted, adding that the building "really needs it."

New transfer station rule

Selectmen unanimously approved a regulation saying no one under the age of 12 is allowed to exit a vehicle at the town transfer station. Town Manager Mark Haddad said he received a couple of phone calls from people saying they had nearly hit children who were running around the transfer station.

Scituate currently has a similar rule.

Wall to come tumbling down

The selectmen's office will soon have a new look.

Town Manager Mark Haddad told the board that the wall dividing the room will be taken down and replaced with a sliding wall, in order to create more meeting space for Haddad, as well as selectmen's meetings.

The board's table will be moved to the wall dividing the main room where selectmen secretary Joyce Studley's desk currently is located. Studley's desk will be moved to where the selectmen's table is currently located.

Also, a second television camera will be added for the meetings. The costs of the renovation will be paid for by MediaOne, as part of its cable-service provider contract with the town. "It will be done at no cost to the taxpayers," said Haddad.

Selectmen liked the proposed change. "That was a good idea you came up with," Selectman Merle Brown told Haddad.

Sandy Beach parking lot

Selectmen unanimously approved creating a second access way to the parking lot at Sandy Beach on Atlantic Avenue. Town Manager Mark Haddad said he was approached by a resident concerned with the entry and exit of the beach. The narrow width of the access point, along with the high sand dune at that point makes entering and exiting the lot is "kind of dangerous," said Haddad.

He suggested creating an exit point at the other end of the lot, where wind has kept the sand height low.

Selectman Michael Sullivan pointed out that police liked the one entry and exit point because it contained anyone in the parking lot after hours. Haddad said a gate would be placed at the new exit, and locked after hours.

Town hall sewer work

Access to town hall, and its parking lot, has been impeded over the few weeks due to ongoing sewer installation work along Highland Ave.

Drivers hoping to turn off South Main Street and onto Highland Avenue via Robert Jason Road or William B. Long, Jr. Road have found their paths blocked by heavy equipment, mounds of earth or an open trench. Town Manager Mark Haddad said that the work is part of the area's sewer installation project that is scheduled to finish later this summer.

Though the sewer lines have been run up to town hall, leaving a couple of unpaved scars across the parking lot, the building is still using its septic tank underneath the garage behind the lot.

Time for walk-ins

Selectmen set aside 10 minutes early in their meetings, usually at 7:40 p.m., to address any concerns from members of the public who have issues that are not on the agenda.

If the matter cannot be handled briefly, it will be placed on a future agenda. Call Town Manager Mark Haddad at 383-4105 for more information. Selectmen's meetings start at 7:30 p.m. and are held on alternate Tuesdays.

Beach, RTF permits

Your beach and RTF permits are expiring. You will need vehicle registrations, or if not, a Massachusetts registration, proof of residency (tax bill or rental lease). You are encouraged to purchase your sticker through the mail by providing a copy of your registration and a self-addressed return envelope.

Stickers are on sale at the town hall have the following schedule. Monday, Wednesday and Thursday 10 a.m. to 2 p.m.; Tuesday evening 5 to 7 p.m. and Friday 10 a.m. to 1 p.m. Stickers will be on sale at the DPW building Monday-Friday from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m.. Beach stickers are $7 per vehicle, and $3 per vehicle for elders over 60. RTF stickers are $100 per family, for senior citizens 65 and over will be $65 and for a single resident $50.

Permits now being issued will expire on May 31, 2001.

Feral cats

To reduce the risk of exposure to zoonitic diseases carried by cats such as rabies, cat scratch disease, toxoplasmosi etc. and reduce potential property damage, the control of feral cats is imperative. In an effort to control these nuisances the Cohasset Board of Health establishes this regulation.

1. Upon the written complaint of three or more citizens, the Board of Health in conjunction with the town's Animal Control Officer (ACO) shall perform an investigation to determine the validity of the complaint. If the complaint is considered valid, the board shall request the ACO to trap the offending cats.

2. When the ACO suspects that there is a feral cat problem, he may, with the concurrence of the health agent, initiate a trapping program without a complaint from residents.

3. If a cat which is privately owned is trapped and the owner cannot be immediately identified and returned, the owner, upon claiming the animal must pay for the cost of its apprehension, feeding and care in accordance with a fee schedule developed by the ACO.

For a copy of the complete regulation contact the Cohasset Board of Health office at 383-4116.

The Cohasset Lobster Lab on Parker Avenue is sporting a new coat of paint.

Improvements underway at Cohasset Lobster Lab

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

The long-awaited improvements to the Hagerty house have begun, with the painting of the building's exterior completed.

According to Kevin Ulmer, president of Lobster Lab, Inc., which is leasing the building from the town, the structure was scraped, primed and repainted to its original yellow color.

Ulmer and the town agreed to a $1-a-year lease two years ago, with the intent of renovating the former office and showroom of the Cohasset Colonials furniture company, into an educational marine research lab for area students. The lease was contingent on Ulmer renovating the exterior and interior of the dilapidated building.

Last month, selectmen expressed their disappointment with the lack of progress of repairs — nearly two years after the agreement was reached, paint continued to peel off the clapboards of the house.

Ulmer notified the town in April that the lab authorized $15,000 to be spent on aesthetic improvements, but the building was not painted until June.

"It's now presentable," he said.

Selectmen chairman Tom Callahan said he has seen the building and is pleased with the work. "They're making the kind of progress — at least in its physical appearance, we've been looking for."

The focus has now shifted to the interior of the building. According to Ulmer, work has begun on the first floor, such as patching walls, cleaning the structure out, as well as rewiring the building. The house currently has no electricity or heat.

"The electric meter has been taken out," said Ulmer, who also is president of Pavonis, a research lab located off Route 3A. "Electricians are in there to make sure the wiring is compliant and can be certified."

These minor improvements are just the beginning for what Ulmer hopes will be a complete remodeling of the building. He currently is in the process of submitting plans to the zoning board of appeals that would see the building squared off, with an extended second floor over the former Cohasset Colonials showroom.

With final plans being submitted for the development of the rest of the two-acre waterfront parcel, Ulmer hopes to finalize his plans soon. The improved structure would make the building handicapped accessible, turn the first floor into a reception area, with offices and holding tanks for the lobsters, and create a second floor laboratory.

Ulmer also said that the lab is paying for repairs to the roof and the electrification of the town-owned boathouse, also located on the Hagerty property. The boathouse is leased by the Cohasset Maritime Institute, a non-profit maritime research "classroom." The Lobster Lab and Maritime Institute are currently involved in discussions that could merge the two organizations.

Russ Bonetti, who is chairman of the town's Hagerty property committee, said that, as a Parker Street resident, he is glad they did it, but expressed reservation about whether the lab will be viable in the long run. "When you look at what they should've done by now [according to Ulmer's initial agreement with the town], this is a very, very small part of what their scheduled timetable is...My concern is, it has taken them three years to do this, how they going to raise enough money to keep this thing viable?" Bonetti added that he has been in able favor of the lab from the start, but hopes selectmen will consider this the make-it or break-it summer.

The town bought the Hagerty property seven years ago. But due to its proximity to the harbor and wetlands, the plans to develop the area into a municipal parking lot and small park have moved slowly. Bonetti recently announced that the Army Corps of Engineers approved the town's plans for the project. A zoning change of the property, from light industry to open space, as well as funding for the project, is expected to be voted upon at a special town meeting this fall.

Selectmen set their goals for short and long term

By Rick Collins
STAFF WRITER

Among the selectmen's short-term ambitions are the development and rezoning of the Hagerty property, the completion of the honor rolls at Veteran's Memorial Park, reevaluating the issue of elected committees versus appointed committees, and working with elected state officials to secure more funding for education.

Cohasset selectmen recently approved their list of short- and long-term objectives for the new fiscal year.

About seven years ago, the town bought the Hagerty property, which is earmarked for a small park and water-front municipal parking lot. The two-acre property is the former site of the Cohasset Colonial furniture manufacturing company. Currently, the site consist of a large, concrete slab, and the company's former office and showroom which is occupied by the non-profit Cohasset Lobster Lab, Inc.. The Army Corps of Engineers recenlty granted needed permits to develop the property.

The area is currently zoned for light industry use, and Hagerty Committee chairman Russ Bonetti has adamantly insisted that the property be rezoned as soon as possible. Owners of the Cohasset Lobster Pound, which is currently located on Border Street, had expressed interest to selectmen about moving their business to the concrete slab on the property, but subsequently withdrew the proposal.

This fall's special town meeting is expected to vote to rezone the property as open space.

The honor rolls at Veterans Memorial Park were started 10 years ago, but after the installation of the World War II honor rolls, the project came to a standstill. The World War II honor roll created controversy when names of those who served as part of the occupying armies after V-J Day, were left off the roll.

Austin Ahern, the head of the private, non-profit corporation in charge of the project, said a lack of funds has caused the standstill.

Nevertheless, selectmen recently voted to pick up the stalled project and see it to completion.

Long-term goals have the board studying the potential of consolidating both the municipal and school services under the tent of the town; putting all town buildings onto a single computer network; working with the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce and Downtown Village Revitalization Corporation to redevelop the village area and developing a public beautification process that would see town buildings maintained better, the duck pond cleaned more often and the town's sewer pump stations improved aesthetically.

State rep. candidates sound off about air base redevelopment

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Is the South Weymouth Naval Air Station vacant? Yes.

Will the redevelopment of the naval air station affect not only the three towns it is located in – Weymouth, Rockland and Abington – but also surrounding towns such as Hingham, Norwell and Whitman, because of traffic reasons? Yes.

Does the debate over the air base's redevelopment plan have the potential of being one of the most volatile, confusing issues for the next six months? Absolutely.

Is it universally agreed by the candidates running for state Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray's seat that the proposed mega-mall for the site is a bad idea? No.

Despite polls that show up to 70 percent of area residents against the construction of a mega-mall and access road from Route 3 to the former air base site, candidate Walter Murray, who is unenrolled, has not come out against the plan. In a recent interview, Murray said he is in favor of using part of the base for a mall, providing that other area needs, such as the creation of open space and recreational areas, is also provided.

Murray also favors the Mills Mall proposal because it would "create labor jobs", "increase the tax revenue base" and result in the widening of Routes 3 and 18.

"Those roads are congested regardless of any base development," he said. "Any expansion [of the roads] would have a positive effect."

The current plan backed by the South Shore Tri-Town Development Corporation would construct a $250 million, 1.1 million-square-foot retail and entertainment center (including 175 anchor and specialty stores), 325,000 square feet of offices and 200,000 square feet of mixed commercial uses on the perimeter of the property.

According to the Mills Corporation, 46 of the 155-acre air base will remain as ponds, open space and landscaped areas.

Murray is the only candidate not dead-set against the idea of a mall on the site. Both Democratic challengers, Mike Holden and Garrett Bradley, both from Hingham, are against the proposal, as is Republican candidate Mary Anne McKenna, also from Hingham.

"While I welcome new families and businesses to the area, I shudder to think of the excessive traffic that will be generated by the mega-mall being proposed," said McKenna, who is running unopposed on the Republican ballot. "Hingham will no longer be known as a bucolic seaside town but rather, the intersection of the South Shore."

Depending on which one of the three party-affiliated candidates you ask, between 30-35,000 additional cars will flood the roads surrounding the air base such as Routes 3, 18, 228 and 123. Hingham and Cohasset residents are concerned that the current disaster known as Queen Ann's Corner at the junction of Routes 53 and 228, will make traffic conditions even worse, with dire depictions of backups stretching from the air base, down Route 228, and all the way to Route 3A in Cohasset, especially during the holiday season.

"The present proposal is a disaster for the region," said Holden. "Route 3 is currently ranked as an 'F' and after what is being characterized as improvements, there will actually be more hours of congestion on Route 3.

"As Route 3 and 18 goes, so goes the region."

Bradley said the biggest issue is the proposed access road from Route 3 which would cut through Hingham's Farm Hills neighborhood. He also said the mall would bring an extra 6,500 cars a day to an already saturated Route 228.

Bradley said that drivers hoping to avoid the congestion on the main roads would try to find shortcuts through Hingham's neighborhoods. "A beautiful neighborhood would just be overrun," he said.

Holden said that he is not anti-business just pro-quality-of-life. "Whatever is ultimately there, if it creates 70,000 additional car trips [to the area], it's not an appropriate site...This is an already established area. You can't try and fit something like that in there."

Murray called the supposed 70,000 car trips [35,000 cars into the complex, 35,000 out] "speculation." He added that he used to frequently commute to Brockton via the area's back roads, and he believes that the region's roads could absorb the traffic. He also pointed out that the mall is still in the development stage, and that the tri-Town corporation has the ability to walk away from the project in six months.

He said it is the responsibility of the area's elected officials to make sure their towns receive the best deal possible from the Mills Corporation, and not have, what he characterized as, a knee-jerk reaction to public opinion polls.

"A public official has to balance competing interests," he said. Murray added that if the region as a whole would benefit from this project, then the opposition of a few, while important in the planning process, shouldn't prove to be an iceburg in the titantic proposal's path.

McKenna disagrees. "Certainly this would create work for many union contractors living locally. However, after a couple of years, the union workers will have moved on to other jobs, while we residents will be forced to contend with traffic nightmares for many years to come."

McKenna said she would favor copying the lead of the Route 128 high-tech belt and Cambridge research labs, and would like to bring a pharmaceutical research facility to the site. "Most of us are familiar with someone facing a debilitating or life-threatening illness. [Don't we all] agree that the more research being done to combat these dreaded diseases, the better off we are as a society?...Let us give the South Shore an opportunity to be on the cutting edge of medical breakthroughs, while at the same time, preserve the wonderful quality of life as we know it."

Bradley's vision for the site is very similar. Citing the inability to fill the $7 and $8 an hour jobs already existing at the South Shore Plaza in Braintree, he suggested bringing a "high-tech medical facility" to the site. Pointing out the already-existing runways, Bradley suggested the facility could-focus on organ transplants, or treating med-flight victims. He said he had recently met a man who was recovering from a stroke he suffered while visiting a relative near Boston. Bradley said the man, who lives on the Cape, considered himself lucky because if the stroke had hit him while at home, he would have had to endure the long-trip up Boston.

Walter Murray, who is unenrolled, is the only candidate for state Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray's seat that backs the mega-mall proposal.

"There really isn't a significant medical facility in the area," Bradley said. "It could serve from Weymouth, all the way down to the Bourne Bridge...It's something that's needed and is a perfect location. You don't have the significant traffic volume, but will create jobs to build it and have high paying jobs."

Holden doesn't have a specific idea for the facility in mind, but said he would not support any plan where the adverse affect on quality of life outweighed any proposed benefits for the area. "Something that is less traffic, less of an environmental impact, less emissions, less noise and less damage to wetlands," would garner his vote he said.

Holden also disagreed that his stance can be characterized as a "knee jerk reaction or responding to the swell of public sentiment." He said that he has visited the Mills Mall in Virginia, met with state officials and civic grops, and based his opinion on information presented from all corners. "It's taking a good deal of time to look at the issue from all angles," he said. "I'm making criticism from a well-enforced base, not a Not In My BackYard (NIMBY) one."

The state primaries will be held on Sept. 19.

AROUND TOWN

REMEMBERING CLARK

As all of you know, the town of Cohasset lost a very dear and special member of our community this past week. Clark Chatterton passed away last week after a lengthy battle with cancer. As was evident at the memorial service held on Monday in his memory, Clark was loved, respected and admired by many. The many stories that were shared brought many tears to all who were there, but also told of the love for his family, friends and co-workers and his passionate love for life, sports and the hundreds of children who he made such a strong impression on. My mom, brother and myself lived next door to Clark, Sallyann, Kim and Troy at number 5 Red Gate Lane for 15 years. No matter what was happening in his own life, Clark was always there to offer a hand to my mom, shovel the driveway or take our trash with his own to the dump. The strong love that he had for his family was always evident as well as the devotion and caring that he shared with his many friends. I think that the memorial service was done so beautifully and gave Clark the goodbye that he so truly deserved. I know that the memories of Mr. Clark Chatterton will remain with us all forever, thank you for being the person that you were! Your family, friends and co-workers will miss you and the Town of Cohasset thanks you for all that you did within our town! To Sallyann, Kim, Troy, Tori and especially you Kelsey, your hero has passed away, but the memories and legacy that he has left here with us will always live on! Please know that we are all here to help and support you in the days to come, in thoughts, prayer and love.

NEW ARRIVAL

I would like to now continue with the Around Town column by announcing a new little face in town. Jonah Bradley Jones, son of Michael and Heather Jones, was born on June 24. Jonah weighed in at a whopping 10 pounds, 4 ounces and was 22 inches long! He joins his sisters Madison, 3-1/2 and Maiah, 2 at home and I am sure he is getting loved and snuggled to pieces. His grandparents are Jeff and Marcia Ludlow and Cliff and Suzanne Jones. Congratulations to all and we cannot wait to see Jonah and his family around town.

WEDDING ANNIVERSARY

I received a wonderful email from the family of Don and Sally O'Neill this week. Don and Sally just celebrated their 40th wedding anniversary! To mark the occasion, their children took them on a surprise weekend trip to Nantucket, which is where they went for their honeymoon. A memorable time was had by all!

Don and Sally live in Osterville now and have a total of 10 grandchildren. Congratulations to a wonderful couple!

BIRTHDAY WISHES

I want to send out a very special Birthday wish to Jim Dignam who celebrated his wonderful day in Wyoming on July 9. Jim and his children, Colin, Natalie and Melinda, had a wonderful trip at a dude ranch where they rode horses, hiked, fished and spotted many wild animals each day. Hope that the day was great and that the vacation was fun and relaxing for you all. Welcome home!

BOWDOIN GRADUATE

Eric Henry, a CHS graduate from the class of 1996 has received his Bachelor of Arts (cum laude) from Bowdoin College in Brunswick, Maine. His career at Bowdoin included a study abroad program in Barcelona, Spain. Eric played four years on the varsity soccer team, (two of which were capped by NCAA appearances) and twice received recognition as a John and Sarah Bowdoin Scholar by finishing in the top 20 percent of his class. His hard work and late nights of study did pay off! After a "chilling out period" and a road trip across the great USA with some college friends, Eric will work in New York City for the investment firm of Conus Partners, Inc. as a research analyst. Great work Eric!

PET PARADE

The first ever COHASSET PET PARADE is coming to town in September! This parade is your chance to show off your best friend: Got a poodle? Get your poodle skirt and bobby socks on! Got a Dalmatian? Dress up like a firefighter or rig your bike or wagon to look like a fire truck. Got a duck? Dress up like a wedge of cheese and you can be "Cheese and Quackers!" Got a cat that looks like a lion? Put her in a cage on your wagon and dress up like a ringmaster or lion tamer. Entries will be $10, there will be prizes for the most creative, etc. All proceeds will go to the Community Center Nursery School playground refurbishment fund. Forms will be available later this month. No Pet? No problem... there will be a bicycle section where you can dress up yourself and your bike. For more information, contact Molly McGowan at 383-2080

WELCOME TO TOWN

We have a wonderful new family to welcome to town! Carmine and Rosanna Nigro, formerly of Springfield, Virginia have moved into 16 Old Pasture Road. The Nigros have two children, Gabriella, 6 and John Luke, 3-1/2. Please make sure to welcome them to Cohasset!

RECTORY SCHOOL

Michael Calorio, son of Thomas F. Calorio and Marie Toomey of Cohasset, was among 60 graduates from The Rectory School in Pomfret, Conn.. This was the largest 9th grade class since the school's founding in 1920. Rectory School is a boarding school for boys in grades 5-9 with a tradition academic curriculum, athletics for all students and and individualized instruction program. Michael will attend day school in the fall. Fantastic Job, Michael.

UMASS GRADUATES

We had a list of wonderful graduates from UMass Boston, which held closing ceremonies on June 3.

Anne M. Leahy received a BA, Joshua K. Roth received a BS. Crispian Guy Alexander Flood received a M.Ed. Hollis M. Strandberg and Jennifer Guerriero Connell both received a M.B.A. and Sara M. Deveney received a Certificate of Advanced Graduate Studies. Great Job to everyone!

DEAN'S LIST

I also received a note from Bryant College in Rhode Island that Elizabeth A. Mahoney, a senior marketing major was named to the Dean's List. Fantastic work, Elizabeth!

CHS REUNIONS!

I had a wonderful message from Lynn Durkin this week. The CHS class of 1980 celebrated its 20th reunion this past weekend at The Red Lion Inn. One & all had a wonderful evening of reminiscing while enjoying the feast prepared by the Inns gourmet chefs. Classmates who were visiting from as far as Germany,(Charlie Coe), Oregon(Ronny White) and Florida (Mark Goff) and as close as Cohasset, Scituate and Hingham started off the evening with a cocktail party at Leslie Carroll Malerbi's home in Scituate and ended the evening dancing until dawn. All involved give the highest of Kudos to the management and chefs at The Red Lion Inn, who despite many construction obstacles this past spring presented an evening that was a huge success!!! We'll all be looking forward to the next reunion at the Red Lion Inn.

Attention Everyone! The CHS class of 1970 is having its 30th class reunion in August and need some help finding a number of classmates. The missing people are: Chris Ketchum, Carolyn Ray-Ray, Ed Trayers, Sally McKinnon, Mark Sisson, Cameron Jones, Karen Coddington, Ann LaVelle(Corddrey), Barbara Bates Kabat, Floyd Ansley and Susan Mitchell. If you have any info on the whereabouts of any of these people, please contact Paul Fiori at 383-1115 or by email at FLEMAN52@netscape.net

My closing words for this week are ones for us all to think about. As we have all seen, life as we know it can change in a matter of minutes. Please take the time to enjoy and live each day to its fullest, take the time to enjoy the "small things", and look around at how lucky and special we all are. Keep sending all of your wonderful news, I am very happy with the response I have received in regards to this column. You can get your news to me by email at jenpiep@yahoo.com or 622 CJC Highway. Have a wonderful week!

How Guernica came to the middle/high school

By Paul H. Narkiewicz
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

A rendering of Picasso's masterpiece Guernica now adorns the walls of the language lab at the middle-high school.

The old language laboratory at Cohasset had two prints that had been done by students and covered large sections of two walls. Emily Atwood had done the Aztec sacrifice and more recently Cecilia Candia did a copy of a Spanish cave painting. My one dream had always been to see a copy of Guernica sharing the walls with the other two paintings. In the past, I had asked different art teachers to find a student who might be willing to undertake this task. Those teachers felt that the task was far too grand. I buried the dream thinking I would never see the painting.

Last year, Bonnie Muir had her classes make tiles for Van Gogh's "Starry Night." Different students while copying from grids that Bonnie had drawn on the print of the painting painted tiles. When the tiles were complete they were glued to a sheet of plywood placed on a wall located between the middle school and the library. This creation certainly lights up the passageway. Each time I passed the painting, I thought of Picasso's masterpiece and wondered how it would look on tiles in the new language laboratory.

When we were asked to make PSO grant applications, I discussed making Picasso's Guernica the foreign language department's request. Mr. Federico and Mr. O'Neil thought it was an excellent idea. I then saw Bonnie Muir to ask if she would consider a joint project with the language department and then undertake this task with her classes. She was unbelievably receptive and her enthusiasm was infectious. She and her classes began the project late in the spring. The completed tiles were shown during the arts night. The viewer's response was very positive. Just before the close of school Mr. Lafontaine placed the plywood in the language lab and Mrs. Muir glued the tiles to the wood. The completed work is beautiful. The lab is now a brighter room with a copy of a world-renowned masterpiece.

Paul H. Narkiewicz is head of the Foreign Language Department at Cohasset Middle/High School.

Summer Institute attracts 30 students

The Summer Institute announces that at least 30 students will participate in this unique program. Students will be engaged in a variety of classes and activities such as conducting community research projects in and around Cohasset Harbor, pulling together in traditional and modern rowing vessels, traveling to Acadia National Park, and living off the land at Holly Hill farm, the center of activity for "An Introduction to Organic Farming." There is still room, however, for students to sign up for both the "Introduction to Maritime Studies" class and the farming class. Parents and students still looking for novel and exciting programs to join are encouraged to enroll immediately in the Summer Institute, especially now that the traditional school year is over and the reality of needing new challenges to the day has set in.

The Summer Institute uses the outdoor environment as the primary classroom to expose students to a variety of topics through outdoor experiences.

Copenhagen carillonneur recital at St. Stephen's

The 76th Anniversary Series of Summer Carillon Recitals from the tower of St. Stephen's Episcopal Church in Cohasset will continue Sunday, July 16, at 6 p.m. with a performance by Ulla Laage, carillonneur at Our Savior's Church in Copenhagen, Denmark. Her program will include original music for carillon, arrangements of folksongs, and transcriptions of music originally written for other instruments.

St. Stephen's Church overlooks Main Street and the Common in Cohasset Village. The carillon recital will take place rain or shine; in case of bad weather, the bells may be heard from parked cars. Blankets, lawn chairs and picnic suppers are invited. Printed programs may be found in the wooden stand near the church courtyard on Highland Avenue, and will also be distributed on the Common and at other designated listening places, along with recital schedules and brochures describing the carillon. At the close of the recital, interested listeners are invited to gather in the Highland Avenue courtyard for a tour of the tower and demonstration of the instrument. For more information, call Sally Slade Warner, St. Stephen's carillonneur at 978/475-2599; Mary Kennedy, assistant carillonneur, at 383-9599, or the church office at 383-1083.

Farewell, Clark

One thing is for sure — Clark Chatterton will be missed.

The beloved brother, father, son, grandfather, husband, co-worker, mentor, coach and friend died much too young last week when he lost his battle with cancer.

But the way Cohasset celebrated his memory Monday under the Big Top at the Music Circus was as unique and wonderful, as was Clark himself.

With a mix of songs, personal remembrances, prayers and scripture readings, so many who knew Clark came to pay tribute to a man whom they both respected and loved.

Here at the Mariner, the Chattertons are very special to us. Sallyann, Clark's wife, recently stepped down after faithfully writing our Around Town column for 16 years. And our sports editors and reporters over the years relied heavily on Clark to provide everything from story ideas to sports schedules.

We are particularly proud to have had the opportunity to honor Clark as Citizen of the Year. At a reception held just seven weeks ago in his honor at Kimballs by the Sea, he seemed so well. We had no idea at the time that his cancer was making its dreaded comeback.

We recall a feature story on Clark that we wrote just over a year ago as an advance on the third annual Relay for Life in Cohasset. When Clark became a volunteer to help organize the first Cohasset Relay two years earlier, he had no idea that six months later he would be diagnosed with the disease. During the interview, we were not only impressed with his courage but the fact that his experience encouraged others to get check ups and may have helped save a couple of lives.

A year later, we interviewed him again. But his time for our feature story highlighting his being named Citizen of the Year.

It was an education to sit there is his office — that we likened to Grand Central Station — as a parade of teachers, administrators, coaches, custodians and students bopped in and out for updates, schedules and questions or requests.

"What am I proudest of?" Clark wondered aloud. "In the past one-half hour, about 15 different people have come in from custodians to bus drivers to the principal.

"I have a working relationship with all those people. One of my strengths is that I can work with anyone."

Then the grandfather of two just shrugged when presented with the list of his good deeds that led to the Citizen of the Year honor.

"Anybody would do that," he said.

Principal Curtis Collins said at Monday's memorial service, "We will all miss him and Cohasset Middle-High School will never be the same."

Yet we all feel richer for having known Clark Chatterton. His daughter, Kim Litchfield told us we were all there to celebrate "your friend Clark" and that his memory would live on at the high school and through the lives of all of us who knew him.

The Rev. Gary Ritts, who presided at Monday's ceremony, encouraged all of us to take a page from Clark's book of life.

"As Clark heard many times, the show must go on and so must all of us," he said. Clark had a deep, ever expanding capacity for love.

"Be a little more spontaneous, caring and giving to those next to us right now," Gary said. "Now is the time to get in the 'caddie' and go on a road trip."

Editor's note: Jim Hamilton's cartoon at right is from the March 6, 1996 Cohasset Mariner. It appeared after news that Clark Chatterton stepped up to the plate with a loan of some badly needed cash for the town that allowed the school department to go forward with design plans for the new Osgood School.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Clark and lacrosse

TO THE EDITOR:

Let me add the voice of a parent to those recalling Clark Chatterton with fondness and respect.

Twelve years ago, Clark agreed to allow a group of boys from grades seven through 12 start a lacrosse club. They had no jerseys, so Clark called on his good friend Chet Stone, the Harvard University equipment manager, and the Skippers — for the first two years of their existence as lax players — competed in crimson and white. Clark, a hardball player by training and baseball lover from birth, helped coach Ken Ekberg nurture the club to varsity status, and overrode the objections of his fellow South Shore athletic directors who wanted their member schools to have nothing to do with another spring sport.

Clark did it again a few years later, allowing a girls' program to be born at a time when many local schools were cutting back on extracurricular activities. This year, with close to 100 boys and girls playing the sport at the middle and high school levels, Clark's vision is a reality.

What I suspect he might never have imagined a decade ago is the impact his ex-Skippers are having in college. Four of the boys to whom he gave a chance to play have captained college teams. One set Providence College's career scoring record this past spring. More than 20 Cohasset boys and girls will have played at the college level by next spring. All of them have had opportunities they might otherwise have missed, because Clark was willing to take a chance on something new.

For an old baseball guy, Clark made a heck of an impression on eastern Massachusetts lacrosse. For the parents of those who've played in his programs, his loss will cast a long shadow on the seasons ahead.

BOARD OF SELECTMEN:

It is intriguing to learn that the Cohasset-Greenbush Mitigation Committee and the selectmen appear upset that Cohasset's "26-item wish list" given on June 5 to the MBTA presumably prompted the MBTA to withdraw a generous six-item package offered in May by the T. These two representative bodies of the town are reportedly considering using Cohasset funds now in a legal action.

The Mitigation Chairman was recently quoted as being frustrated after three years of his anti-train activity. More than a few of us are frustrated by the road blocks created by the Mitigation Committee — after 12 years of pro-Greenbush endorsement by many members of the Cohasset community.

It would appear that some compromise could and should be reachable. The town does have some reasonable desires — crossing treatments, horns, and fencing protection for safety and noise absorption. However, railroad or no railroad, new wells, refurbishment of old wells, flood control and new fire stations are more of the town's responsibility. If the T would help with them, fine and good, but they shouldn't be subjects for bribery. Our multiple crossings, while a safety concern, certainly could be construed as assets, not detriments to the fire department.

Where are our historic properties within shooting distance of the Greenbush right of way which need $2 million of railroad funds? We do not blame the MBTA for raising its eyebrows.

Hingham has seen the foolhardiness of its legal maneuvering, after spending $3 million of its citizens' tax dollars. With the obvious success of the other two South Shore lines, antagonists of Greenbush are being "spoilers" for a reasonable settlement that would benefit Cohasset. Public commuting transport, with a burgeoning population, and horrendous, time-consuming, gridlock highways, is not only essential but inevitable.

It behooves Cohasset to consult with rational motives — "mitigating," not obstructively asking for the moon. We desire, and should offer perceptive arbitration — not demand, in essence, a blank check.

Village concerns

TO THE EDITOR:

While it appears that your correspondent, David Tibbetts, intends to have a series of articles concerning the town's 'revitalization', we cannot believe that it will contain any words presented by any of the village's merchants that might be considered in opposition to this 'revitalization'. And perhaps, there is no such thing. And perhaps, cows can fly.

Those Cohasset residents who object to the CRC (Cohasset Revitalization Corporation) and its approach to our village center, do so for many reasons, not only the feeling that this is an oligarchy. They object because there are so many more vital projects for the town. They object that the CRC's thrust is a business thrust as opposed to something that would benefit the entire town. They object because the excuse of failing or failed businesses in the center of town is being used to sugar coat selfishness. Businesses have failed, as was quoted in the July 6th Mariner, for years, for decades. Maybe it was poor or non-existent marketing reports, maybe it was the choices made, maybe it was the fact that Mom & Pop stores find that approach to be especially difficult in current times, maybe it was the smallness and location of the center of town. Those things will not change with the CRC, unless they plan on blasting out the center and making it a huge parking lot. There are also successful businesses in the center and it is important to discern why they are successful. What need/niche have they answered and what other businesses are needed and would survive down town?

To build a community requires more than stores, restaurants, streetscapes, flowers, curbs, and brick sidewalks. It doesn't even begin with those things.

Chatterton fondly remembered in special ceremony reception at Kimball's by the Sea. Not long thereafter, Chatterton, who was diagnosed with bladder cancer back in January 1998, became ill and was due for another round of chemotherapy at the time of his death.

Although many knew of Chatterton's cancer, his death was still a shock. The good-natured 58-year-old fought the dreaded disease with resilience. Losing his trademark blonde hair for months didn't diminish his zest for life or wish to help others. In fact, Chatterton's cancer diagnosis prompted other teachers at the middle-high school to get check ups and two were subsequently diagnosed with the disease.

"He has won the game to move up with mother, father and loved ones to join the all-star team and God is a happier coach with Clark at his side."

— The Rev. Gary Ritts

Monday's memorial ceremony scheduled for 11 a.m. was held up for about 15 minutes to allow extra time for the seemingly endless stream of friends, co-workers, students, town officials and ordinary citizens to make their way from the packed parking lot to the tent.

At the aisles, students and friends acting as ushers handed out brochures that included the memorial program and featured photographs of Chatterton and his family over the years.

The Rev. Gary Ritts of the Second Congregational Church led the service that encompassed a mix of prayers, scripture readings, songs and personal remembrances – reflecting the truly unique person Chatterton was.

At the start, crowd stood and joined soloist Lily Sestito in singing "The Star Spangled Banner" in honor of Chatterton who, as an athlete, coach and athletic director, had attended innumerable games and events where the National Anthem was played.

Gill regaled the audience with stories about the "infamous" poison room at the high school where male members of the faculty would gather for lunch and Chatterton – known for his gift of gab – would hold court.

His remarks about Chatterton's talent for discourse were echoed by middle-high school principal Curtis Collins and childhood friend Bruce Williams.

Known for a range of nicknames – Williams said "Chatterbox" fit Chatterton the best.

"Some say he was a born talker," Williams recalled with a laugh. "Maybe so but he practiced it and I was his audience." Williams related the story of the final play in a 1957 football game against Hull. The score was tied and Chatterton, who was quarterback of the undefeated Skippers, decided to throw a pass.

"It was sweet delight, an heroic pass," Williams recalled. "Trying not to let us down, he pulled it out at the last minute." But the pass was dropped in the end zone and the Skippers walked away with a tie.

"I sometime think about that game and think about Chatterbox's perfect pass and wonder the way I do this sad day, why things did not work out better," Williams said.

Collins, a friend and colleague of Chatterton's for 32 years, said Chatterton was also well known for his "sartorial elegance." Collins recalled Chatterton standing in a corner between classes with a hat on his head and a towel around his neck.

As his wife Sallyann Chatterton looks on, Clark addresses well-wishers at the Citizen of the Year reception May 21 at Kimball's by the Sea.

"I never saw him in PE clothes," he said. "In May in his last weeks with us, Clark came out of a successful venue in the poison room with his shirt tail out and his undershirt out. I chuckled, 'that's my Clarkie.'

"He looked like a million bucks to me," Collins said.

Cancer survivor Karen Burns, speaking through a voice prosthetic, praised Chatterton's volunteer efforts with the American Cancer Society Relay For Life over the years.

"Clark's personality put the light in Relay For Life," she said.

Chatterton was one of the few members that hadn't had cancer of the organizing committee for Cohasset's first relay back in 1997. He went to about 20 meetings to help orchestrate the event and the following January the American Cancer Society honored him with a plaque.

"They didn't have to thank me so much, that they brought me into the society," Chatterton joked at the time about the fact his cancer was diagnosed a few weeks later.

Being easygoing, friendly and having the ability to tap into a memory that didn't seem to forget anything – from dozens of sports schedules to the names of graduates and their families — was only a small part of what made Chatterton so special.

His friends and families talked about his kindness, generosity of spirit, and deep caring for his fellow man at Monday's service.

Back in 1996 when the new Osgood School project was in trouble, it was Chatterton, who tapped into his own savings to give the school department a loan.

Friends also recalled his more than 40 years running the concession and the South Shore Music Circus and his athletic talent that led to two winters in Florida where he tried his hand at professional baseball. Earlier this year, Chatterton was named District C Athletic Director of the Year by the Massachusetts Secondary School Athletic Directors Association, presented annually to the AD who displays the qualities of leadership and meritorious achievement.

Chatterton's granddaughter Kelsey Litchfield said Chatterton taught her what being a hero means.

"My grampy made everyone feel loved and wanted," she said.

The Rev. Ritts helped those who loved Chatterton, let him go.

"Clark has played the final game and first for us it seems like a tremendous defeat," he said. "For him, although difficult to leave his team behind, this is a win, a triumph.

"He has won the game to move up with mother, father and loved ones to join the all-star team and God is a happier coach with Clark at his side."

Youth sports needs rules — for adults

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

There is an organization in Florida called the National Alliance for Youth Sports which puts out a "code of ethics," not for the kids who kick and toss the ball around, but for their parents who watch.

This is necessary because, while the youngsters know the rules for playing, in too many cases, their folks apparently don't have the slightest idea that there are rules for watching as well.

Needless to say, one of the rules was violated to a fare-thee-well in Reading last week when the father of one youth hockey player allegedly beat to death the father of another in a dispute over their 10-year-old offspring's' rough play.

The community of Jupiter in Florida requires soccer moms and football dads to attend mandatory sportsmanship classes before their youngsters are allowed to set foot on the playing field.

True, it was only a pickup game of shinny and technically not a youth hockey game, but it's an extreme example of what can happen in youth sports when they are organized by — and in many cases for — adults. Only last fall, the Northern Ohio Girls Soccer League instituted a "Silent Sunday" in which coaches and parents alike were forbidden to shout words of encouragement or obscenities during a weekend's games.

"We want kids to be able to learn and be able to think and play without the constant yelling," said Al Soper, the league president.

"Every single player I've talked to is thrilled with the idea," said Carl Pavlovich, one of the coaches.

In many cases, it's the adults who watch, rather than the kids who play, who are most in need of rules.

What do you do about an adult who offers a 10-year-old boy $2 to throw at a Little League batter? Or a father who runs out of the stands to slug a 15-year-old soccer player? Or a father who sues the coach of his kid's team for not winning enough games?

Bill Veeck, the Barnum of Baseball who used to own the Cleveland Indians, liked to tell the story of the father who was coaching his son's youth baseball team.

The kid dug in at the plate and knocked one of his dad's pitches over the fence. The next pitch came straight for the youngster's head.

"What was I supposed to do?" asked the father/coach. "The little (expletive deleted) hit my curve ball, didn't he?" Parents of 9-year-old baseball players in Roxbury's Roberto Clemente League are required to sit at least 20 feet from the players' benches during a game and must stay out of arguments between coaches and umpires or else.

The community of Jupiter in Florida requires soccer moms and football dads to attend mandatory sportsmanship classes before their youngsters are allowed to set foot on the playing field.

The National Alliance for Youth Sports even has designed a parents' training program which requires parents to watch a 19-minute video, read a handbook about the sport in question, and sign a pledge to be good fans.

Then and only then are they, as adults, ready to attend games played by 9 and 10-year-olds.

LIBRARY CORNER

Celebrity series

To inaugurate the summer series of local guest readers, the Paul Pratt Memorial Library welcomed Roger Lincoln, Cohasset Fire Chief. Chief Lincoln read two picture book stories about firefighters, alternating with Suzanne Terry, children's librarian, who read one book.

There also was a general discussion of fire-fighting clothing, equipment, and vehicles, using a non-fiction book about fire-fighting to illustrate. Chief Lincoln brought plastic fire helmets which he distributed to the children. There were 32 children and 15 adults who attended the program.

New Books

The following is a list of new non-fiction books available at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library.

"Tin Cup Dream" by Michael D'Antonio, NNF796.352DAN

Follows a self-taught Mexican golfer's season on the PGA tour. Fascinating look at the PGA now shown on TV, plus dozens of interesting tidbits and anecdotes from golf history.

"The Truth about the Irish" by Terry Eagleton, NNF941.5EAG

A very cheeky look at Irish life and culture.

"The Landscape Makeover Book" by Sarah Von Trapp, NNF635.9 VON

Sensible and imaginative hints to transform existing landscape elements to reshape the character of your yard.

"Twice Blessed" by Joan Leonard, NNF649.153

Everything you need to know about having a second child, repairing yourself, your marriage, and your firstborn.

"Conzentrate" by Sam Horn, NNF153.7HOR

Real-life ways to pay attention, despite distractions, pressure and multiple priorities.

"Quintet" by David Blum, NNF780BLU

Three portraits of five musical luminaries, YoYoMa, Jeffrey Tate and others, provides a fascinating glimpse into the world of music.

Audiobook survey

In a recent survey, the library's audiobook users indicated a high degree of satisfaction with the library's growing collection. Mysteries, romance, and spy/legal thrillers topped the list of favorite genres. But "classic" fiction and non-fiction were also enjoyed. Most "listeners" prefer the abridged editions, but some have requested the unabridged format.

The library's collection of audiobooks now numbers 494. A list of all titles is updated monthly.

The Magic Door

New England Opera Theater will present a performance for young people and families this summer entitled "The Magic Door" as part of its Lyrical Library Tour 2000. "The Magic Door" is a high-spirited program of musical selections that have been inspired by well-known stories for children. The performance will highlight a variety of literary classics for young people, including songs and musical scenes from Pinocchio, Peter Pan and Peanuts as well as traditional fairy tales, such as Jack and the Beanstalk and The Three Little Pigs.

"The Magic Door" will be presented by John Davies, director of New England Opera Theater at 7 p.m., Aug. 1, in the Children's Room.

Davies is a professional opera singer who has performed principal roles with opera companies throughout the United States, including the Metropolitan Opera Company, San Francisco Opera and the Opera Company of Boston. He will be accompanied by his wife, Evelyn Davies and will be joined during the performance by his 12-year old daughter, Beth.

Join 'Million Moms'

On Mother's Day, 750 thousand moms and dads and brothers and sisters gathered on the Washington Mall to show support for gun control and ending the violence that is increasingly encroaching upon our daily lives.

Your local neighbors were there. Come meet them and John Rosenthal from Stop Handgun Violence to discuss ways to increase local awareness, support existing regulation, and facilitate change in upcoming elections. On Thursday, July 20 at 7:30 p.m. at the Bancroft Hall the local "Million Moms" invite you to join them to help them create a new reality.

Straits Pond group elects its officers

The Straits Pond Watershed Association (SPWA) is a recently formed, non-profit organization. Its mission is to facilitate efforts to maintain and improve the environmental quality and the beauty of Straits Pond. SPWA membership is open to all residents of Hull, Cohasset, and Hingham.

During the June 26 meeting of the SPWA an election was held. The following individuals were elected: Lawry Reid (Hull), president; Rob Gilman (Hull), vice president; Merle Graham (Cohasset), treasurer; C. Anne Murray (Hull), secretary; Augie Stratoti (Hull), executive board member-at-large; Vincent Dunn (Cohasset), executive board member-at-large.

If you are interested in learning more about the SPWA or if you have grant writing experience and would be willing to help, you are invited to contact C. Anne Murray by e-mail at mail to:GreenHillCAM@cs.com or by telephone at (781) 925-2010.

Lab progress

THOMAS J. CALLAHAN-CHAIRMAN
BOARD OF SELECTMEN

In reply to your letter of June 21, we respectfully disagree with your characterization of a lack of substantive progress on the Lab. I would urge each member of the Board to personally visit the Lab during the week to get a first hand sense both for the improvements we have made to the interior and exterior of the building, but more importantly to see the students who are using the facilities this summer. We are in the process of restoring electrical service to the Lab and the boathouse so that the students can use the various instruments they require for their research without needing to travel to the high school.

Meanwhile, we are still awaiting the approved site plan for the Hagerty property with the Army Corps' final changes and our building plan incorporated (the Lab paid Civil Designs a $500 retainer for this work back on March 10). Although John Modzelewski was finally given the go ahead by Mark Haddad several weeks ago, we still do not have the plan. As soon as it is received, we are prepared to begin filing for the necessary permits and approvals, which may become the rate limiting step in our building renovation plans.

OPINION

EDITORIAL

Farewell, Clark

One thing is for sure — Clark Chatterton will be missed.

The beloved brother, father, son, grandfather, husband, co-worker, mentor, coach and friend died much too young last week when he lost his battle with cancer.

But the way Cohasset celebrated his memory Monday under the Big Top at the Music Circus was as unique and wonderful, as was Clark himself.

With a mix of songs, personal remembrances, prayers and scripture readings, so many who knew Clark came to pay tribute to a man whom they both respected and loved.

Here at the Mariner, the Chattertons are very special to us. Sallyann, Clark's wife, recently stepped down after faithfully writing our Around Town column for 16 years. And our sports editors and reporters over the years relied heavily on Clark to provide everything from story ideas to sports schedules.

We are particularly proud to have had the opportunity to honor Clark as Citizen of the Year. At a reception held just seven weeks ago in his honor at Kimballs by the Sea, he seemed so well. We had no idea at the time that his cancer was making its dreaded comeback.

We recall a feature story on Clark that we wrote just over a year ago as an advance on the third annual Relay for Life in Cohasset. When Clark became a volunteer to help organize the first Cohasset Relay two years earlier, he had no idea that six months later he would be diagnosed with the disease. During the interview, we were not only impressed with his courage but the fact that his experience encouraged others to get check ups and may have helped save a couple of lives.

A year later, we interviewed him again. But his time for our feature story highlighting his being named Citizen of the Year.

It was an education to sit there is his office — that we likened to Grand Central Station — as a parade of teachers, administrators, coaches, custodians and students bopped in and out for updates, schedules and questions or requests.

"What am I proudest of?" Clark wondered aloud. "In the past one-half hour, about 15 different people have come in from custodians to bus drivers to the principal.

"I have a working relationship with all those people. One of my strengths is that I can work with anyone."

Then the grandfather of two just shrugged when presented with the list of his good deeds that led to the Citizen of the Year honor.

"Anybody would do that," he said.

Principal Curtis Collins said at Monday's memorial service, "We will all miss him and Cohasset Middle-High School will never be the same."

Yet we all feel richer for having known Clark Chatterton. His daughter, Kim Litchfield told us we were all there to celebrate "your friend Clark" and that his memory would live on at the high school and through the lives of all of us who knew him.

The Rev. Gary Ritts, who presided at Monday's ceremony, encouraged all of us to take a page from Clark's book of life.

"As Clark heard many times, the show must go on and so must all of us," he said. Clark had a deep, ever expanding capacity for love.

"Be a little more spontaneous, caring and giving to those next to us right now," Gary said. "Now is the time to get in the 'caddie' and go on a road trip."

Clark and lacrosse

TO THE EDITOR:

Let me add the voice of a parent to those recalling Clark Chatterton with fondness and respect.

Twelve years ago, Clark agreed to allow a group of boys from grades seven through 12 start a lacrosse club. They had no jerseys, so Clark called on his good friend Chet Stone, the Harvard University equipment manager, and the Skippers — for the first two years of their existence as lax players — competed in crimson and white. Clark, a hardball player by training and baseball lover from birth, helped coach Ken Ekberg nurture the club to varsity status, and overrode the objections of his fellow South Shore athletic directors who wanted their member schools to have nothing to do with another spring sport.

Clark did it again a few years later, allowing a girls' program to be born at a time when many local schools were cutting back on extracurricular activities. This year, with close to 100 boys and girls playing the sport at the middle and high school levels, Clark's vision is a reality.

What I suspect he might never have imagined a decade ago is the impact his ex-Skippers are having in college. Four of the boys to whom he gave a chance to play have captained college teams. One set Providence College's career scoring record this past spring. More than 20 Cohasset boys and girls will have played at the college level by next spring. All of them have had opportunities they might otherwise have missed, because Clark was willing to take a chance on something new.

For an old baseball guy, Clark made a heck of an impression on eastern Massachusetts lacrosse. For the parents of those who've played in his programs, his loss will cast a long shadow on the seasons ahead.

No blank check

BOARD OF SELECTMEN:

It is intriguing to learn that the Cohasset-Greenbush Mitigation Committee and the selectmen appear upset that Cohasset's "26-item wish list" given on June 5 to the MBTA presumably prompted the MBTA to withdraw a generous six-item package offered in May by the T. These two representative bodies of the town are reportedly considering using Cohasset funds now in a legal action.

The Mitigation Chairman was recently quoted as being frustrated after three years of his anti-train activity. More than a few of us are frustrated by the road blocks created by the Mitigation Committee — after 12 years of pro-Greenbush endorsement by many members of the Cohasset community.

It would appear that some compromise could and should be reachable. The town does have some reasonable desires — crossing treatments, horns, and fencing protection for safety and noise absorption. However, railroad or no railroad, new wells, refurbishment of old wells, flood control and new fire stations are more of the town's responsibility. If the T would help with them, fine and good, but they shouldn't be subjects for bribery. Our multiple crossings, while a safety concern, certainly could be construed as assets, not detriments to the fire department.

Where are our historic properties within shooting distance of the Greenbush right of way which need $2 million of railroad funds? We do not blame the MBTA for raising its eyebrows.

Hingham has seen the foolhardiness of its legal maneuvering, after spending $3 million of its citizens' tax dollars. With the obvious success of the other two South Shore lines, antagonists of Greenbush are being "spoilers" for a reasonable settlement that would benefit Cohasset. Public commuting transport, with a burgeoning population, and horrendous, time-consuming, gridlock highways, is not only essential but inevitable.

It behooves Cohasset to consult with rational motives — "mitigating," not obstructively asking for the moon. We desire, and should offer perceptive arbitration — not demand, in essence, a blank check.

"I never saw him in PE clothes," he said. "In May in his last weeks with us, Clark came out of a successful venue in the poison room with his shirt tail out and his undershirt out. I chuckled, 'that's my Clarkie.'

"He looked like a million bucks to me," Collins said.

Cancer survivor Karen Burns, speaking through a voice prosthetic, praised Chatterton's volunteer efforts with the American Cancer Society Relay For Life over the years.

"Clark's personality put the light in Relay For Life," she said.

Chatterton was one of the few members that hadn't had cancer of the organizing committee for Cohasset's first relay back in 1997. He went to about 20 meetings to help orchestrate the event and the following January the American Cancer Society honored him with a plaque.

"They didn't have to thank me so much, that they brought me into the society," Chatterton joked at the time about the fact his cancer was diagnosed a few weeks later.

Being easygoing, friendly and having the ability to tap into a memory that didn't seem to forget anything – from dozens of sports schedules to the names of graduates and their families — was only a small part of what made Chatterton so special.

His friends and families talked about his kindness, generosity of spirit, and deep caring for his fellow man at Monday's service.

Back in 1996 when the new Osgood School project was in trouble, it was Chatterton, who tapped into his own savings to give the school department a loan.

Friends also recalled his more than 40 years running the concession and the South Shore Music Circus and his athletic talent that led to two winters in Florida where he tried his hand at professional baseball. Earlier this year, Chatterton was named District C Athletic Director of the Year by the Massachusetts Secondary School Athletic Directors Association, presented annually to the AD who displays the qualities of leadership and meritorious achievement.

Chatterton's granddaughter Kelsey Litchfield said Chatterton taught her what being a hero means.

"My grampy made everyone feel loved and wanted," she said.

The Rev. Ritts helped those who loved Chatterton, let him go.

"Clark has played the final game and first for us it seems like a tremendous defeat," he said. "For him, although difficult to leave his team behind, this is a win, a triumph.

"He has won the game to move up with mother, father and loved ones to join the all-star team and God is a happier coach with Clark at his side."

Youth sports needs rules — for adults

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

There is an organization in Florida called the National Alliance for Youth Sports which puts out a "code of ethics," not for the kids who kick and toss the ball around, but for their parents who watch.

This is necessary because, while the youngsters know the rules for playing, in too many cases, their folks apparently don't have the slightest idea that there are rules for watching as well.

Needless to say, one of the rules was violated to a fare-thee-well in Reading last week when the father of one youth hockey player allegedly beat to death the father of another in a dispute over their 10-year-old offspring's' rough play.

The community of Jupiter in Florida requires soccer moms and football dads to attend mandatory sportsmanship classes before their youngsters are allowed to set foot on the playing field.

True, it was only a pickup game of shinny and technically not a youth hockey game, but it's an extreme example of what can happen in youth sports when they are organized by — and in many cases for — adults. Only last fall, the Northern Ohio Girls Soccer League instituted a "Silent Sunday" in which coaches and parents alike were forbidden to shout words of encouragement or obscenities during a weekend's games.

"We want kids to be able to learn and be able to think and play without the constant yelling," said Al Soper, the league president.

"Every single player I've talked to is thrilled with the idea," said Carl Pavlovich, one of the coaches.

In many cases, it's the adults who watch, rather than the kids who play, who are most in need of rules.

What do you do about an adult who offers a 10-year-old boy $2 to throw at a Little League batter? Or a father who runs out of the stands to slug a 15-year-old soccer player? Or a father who sues the coach of his kid's team for not winning enough games?

Bill Veeck, the Barnum of Baseball who used to own the Cleveland Indians, liked to tell the story of the father who was coaching his son's youth baseball team.

The kid dug in at the plate and knocked one of his dad's pitches over the fence. The next pitch came straight for the youngster's head.

"What was I supposed to do?" asked the father/coach. "The little (expletive deleted) hit my curve ball, didn't he?" Parents of 9-year-old baseball players in Roxbury's Roberto Clemente League are required to sit at least 20 feet from the players' benches during a game and must stay out of arguments between coaches and umpires or else.

The community of Jupiter in Florida requires soccer moms and football dads to attend mandatory sportsmanship classes before their youngsters are allowed to set foot on the playing field.

The National Alliance for Youth Sports even has designed a parents' training program which requires parents to watch a 19-minute video, read a handbook about the sport in question, and sign a pledge to be good fans.

Then and only then are they, as adults, ready to attend games played by 9 and 10-year-olds.

LIBRARY CORNER

Celebrity series

To inaugurate the summer series of local guest readers, the Paul Pratt Memorial Library welcomed Roger Lincoln, Cohasset Fire Chief. Chief Lincoln read two picture book stories about firefighters, alternating with Suzanne Terry, children's librarian, who read one book.

There also was a general discussion of fire-fighting clothing, equipment, and vehicles, using a non-fiction book about fire-fighting to illustrate. Chief Lincoln brought plastic fire helmets which he distributed to the children. There were 32 children and 15 adults who attended the program.

New Books

The following is a list of new non-fiction books available at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library.

"Tin Cup Dream" by Michael D'Antonio, NNF796.352DAN

Follows a self-taught Mexican golfer's season on the PGA tour. Fascinating look at the PGA now shown on TV, plus dozens of interesting tidbits and anecdotes from golf history.

"The Truth about the Irish" by Terry Eagleton, NNF941.5EAG

A very cheeky look at Irish life and culture.

"The Landscape Makeover Book" by Sarah Von Trapp, NNF635.9 VON

Sensible and imaginative hints to transform existing landscape elements to reshape the character of your yard.

"Twice Blessed" by Joan Leonard, NNF649.153

Everything you need to know about having a second child, repairing yourself, your marriage, and your firstborn.

"Conzentrate" by Sam Horn, NNF153.7HOR

Real-life ways to pay attention, despite distractions, pressure and multiple priorities.

"Quintet" by David Blum, NNF780BLU

Three portraits of five musical luminaries, YoYoMa, Jeffrey Tate and others, provides a fascinating glimpse into the world of music.

Audiobook survey

In a recent survey, the library's audiobook users indicated a high degree of satisfaction with the library's growing collection. Mysteries, romance, and spy/legal thrillers topped the list of favorite genres. But "classic" fiction and non-fiction were also enjoyed. Most "listeners" prefer the abridged editions, but some have requested the unabridged format.

The library's collection of audiobooks now numbers 494. A list of all titles is updated monthly.

The Magic Door

New England Opera Theater will present a performance for young people and families this summer entitled "The Magic Door" as part of its Lyrical Library Tour 2000. "The Magic Door" is a high-spirited program of musical selections that have been inspired by well-known stories for children. The performance will highlight a variety of literary classics for young people, including songs and musical scenes from Pinocchio, Peter Pan and Peanuts as well as traditional fairy tales, such as Jack and the Beanstalk and The Three Little Pigs.

"The Magic Door" will be presented by John Davies, director of New England Opera Theater at 7 p.m., Aug. 1, in the Children's Room.

Davies is a professional opera singer who has performed principal roles with opera companies throughout the United States, including the Metropolitan Opera Company, San Francisco Opera and the Opera Company of Boston. He will be accompanied by his wife, Evelyn Davies and will be joined during the performance by his 12-year old daughter, Beth.

Join 'Million Moms'

On Mother's Day, 750 thousand moms and dads and brothers and sisters gathered on the Washington Mall to show support for gun control and ending the violence that is increasingly encroaching upon our daily lives.

Your local neighbors were there. Come meet them and John Rosenthal from Stop Handgun Violence to discuss ways to increase local awareness, support existing regulation, and facilitate change in upcoming elections. On Thursday, July 20 at 7:30 p.m. at the Bancroft Hall the local "Million Moms" invite you to join them to help them create a new reality.

Straits Pond group elects its officers

The Straits Pond Watershed Association (SPWA) is a recently formed, non-profit organization. Its mission is to facilitate efforts to maintain and improve the environmental quality and the beauty of Straits Pond. SPWA membership is open to all residents of Hull, Cohasset, and Hingham.

During the June 26 meeting of the SPWA an election was held. The following individuals were elected: Lawry Reid (Hull), president; Rob Gilman (Hull), vice president; Merle Graham (Cohasset), treasurer; C. Anne Murray (Hull), secretary; Augie Stratoti (Hull), executive board member-at-large; Vincent Dunn (Cohasset), executive board member-at-large.

If you are interested in learning more about the SPWA or if you have grant writing experience and would be willing to help, you are invited to contact C. Anne Murray by e-mail at mail to:GreenHillCAM@cs.com or by telephone at (781) 925-2010.

Lab progress

THOMAS J. CALLAHAN-CHAIRMAN
BOARD OF SELECTMEN

In reply to your letter of June 21, we respectfully disagree with your characterization of a lack of substantive progress on the Lab. I would urge each member of the Board to personally visit the Lab during the week to get a first hand sense both for the improvements we have made to the interior and exterior of the building, but more importantly to see the students who are using the facilities this summer. We are in the process of restoring electrical service to the Lab and the boathouse so that the students can use the various instruments they require for their research without needing to travel to the high school.

Meanwhile, we are still awaiting the approved site plan for the Hagerty property with the Army Corps' final changes and our building plan incorporated (the Lab paid Civil Designs a $500 retainer for this work back on March 10). Although John Modzelewski was finally given the go ahead by Mark Haddad several weeks ago, we still do not have the plan. As soon as it is received, we are prepared to begin filing for the necessary permits and approvals, which may become the rate limiting step in our building renovation plans.

Clark Chatterton 'was everybody's captain'

By Jim O'Sullivan
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Game called on account of darkness.

Legendary sportswriter Grantland Rice wrote that in 1948 when Babe Ruth died. The words are appropriate again, 52 years later, as the town of Cohasset has lost a Ruthian figure of its own.

Clark Chatterton was the athletic director at Cohasset High School for 24 years. He managed Music Circus concessions here for 40 years. He lived here in town for close to half a century. He was the Skipper quarterback for four years.

"This place was him. It's just never going to be the same. There is no bigger symbol of Cohasset than him."
— Ron Ford

He was a son in this town, a husband, a father, a grandfather. He wore a lot of hats.

A few years ago, one of the hats that he wore was a black cowboy hat that he had taken to donning sometimes for football games, sometimes for just hanging around school and around town. It was before he'd contracted cancer and chemotherapy had taken his hair, but even then it looked strange, a little off. Clark Chatterton wasn't a black hat sort of guy. In the movies, the good guys wear white hats, and Chatterton was certainly one of the good guys.

The outpouring at his memorial service on Monday reflected that. The Music Circus' yellow tent contained a veritable Who's Who of Cohasset, with elected officials, teenagers, high school classmates, family, colleagues, and people who had no reason for being there other than to show their gratitude for what CHS teacher Mike Gill called a "job well done." Chatterton had that effect on people; as his daughter Kim noted in her remembrance, you couldn't go anywhere with Chatterton without running into someone he knew.

A few years ago, a bus scheduling foul-up had left parts of two Cohasset spring sports teams stranded in Cohasset for a game against Hull. Chatterton crammed just under half the tennis team and junior varsity baseball team into his black Cadillac, cheerfully violating several laws of both the state and the high school athletics governing body. While one middle infielder nearly suffocated in the trunk while riding on top of a bag of catcher's equipment, Chatterton pulled over several times along the way to talk to people he knew. When we arrived in Hull, we had a red-faced, gasping second baseman and a better appreciation for how many people Chatterton really knew.

In a small town, he was a big deal. As much as he knew everyone, everyone knew Chatterton and what he meant to the school, the town,

Legion squad still in first place

Tough slate of games await Cohasset/Scituate team this week

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

The Cohasset-Scituate Legion baseball team, off to a terrific 6-1 start, has remained in first place in their tough and competitive league despite a three-game losing streak which dropped its record to 6-4.

"We're still in first place, but don't ask me how," said coach Scott Arnold. "We've had a lot of kids on vacation and with other commitments. We still haven't been able to field a full team and put kids in their natural positions."

The team, known as George H. Mealy Post 118, is about to embark upon its "toughest week of the season," according to Arnold. They were to play the top Quincy team Wednesday night, face Milton at home on Thursday and are on the road Friday against a tough Braintree team.

The squad has loaded its lineup, both offensively and defensively, with outstanding performers from Cohasset High, Scituate High and B.C. High.

From Cohasset, Greg O'Keeffe and Nick Bolster have been terrific starting pitchers this year. As part of a tremendous pitching staff, both threw no-hitters this past season for Cohasset High School.

"They have pitched unbelievably," said Arnold of the whole staff, including O'Keeffe and Bolster. "Usually in Legion, I have to use two or three guys per game. But these guys going the distance, six or seven innings, it really has helped me save arms."

The other exceptional pitchers in the starting rotation are Tim Duggan and Jesse Cole. Both from Scituate High, they have performed extremely well in this young season..

Also from Cohasset is all-star centerfielder Doug O'Brien, who led the South Shore League in batting average this past season.

But to have a successful team, everyone needs to contribute, not just a handful.

"On this team, there are no heroes," said Arnold. "They are all playing hard. I would have to list all 18 players in order to be fair."

The league in which Cohasset is playing has been strong for years. At the top of the league with a record of 6-3, Cohasset has been turning heads and raising eyebrows after turning in horrendous seasons the past few years.

Even the coach has been pleasantly surprised at the effort of his club.

"I expected to be a little better than .500 [at this point in the year]," said Arnold.

Working under Arnold has been assistant Coach Ralph Barry, who has been helping Arnold manage the squad in practices and games.

"He's done a great job teaching the kids; giving them tips on base running and hitting," stated Arnold.

Cohasset recently lost 6-2 at home to Canton, but managed to hang on to their fi game lead over Weymouth (5-3).

Canton improved to 3-3 on the year.

Coach Arnold was disappointed with the loss, but took it in stride and maintained a positive outlook.

"We played real poorly, and we didn't swing the bats well. I can guarantee better results for next time."

At the rate the team is going, it should shape up to be quite an enjoyable season. It appears you don't have to get paid the big bucks to be considered the Boys of Summer.

Athletics hustle their way to championship

Barnes Field was the site for some very intense championship baseball the past few weeks. Two of the hardest throwing pitchers in the league, Chris Bryan for the visiting team Athletics and DJ Silvia of the Dodgers went head-to-head.

Pitching and defense dominated the game. The Athletics got great defense from their solid group of 10-year old rookies, led by Cody Morgan, Pat Doonan, Brendan Hughes. They also got a huge play from Evan Deutch when he made a perfect relay throw from center field to cutoff man Danny Sullivan,who then gunned down Justin Woods at the plate with a strong tag applied by Pete "Ossie" Oswald. After three innings the score read: Athletics 0 Dodgers 0.

The defense kept getting better with a great running catch in left field by Zach Murray to end another Dodger threat. Tyler Kennedy and Parker Berg also proved that defense can win ball games with their solid play in the field. Austen Lanzallotti continued his great defense, making a great catch in short center field just over second base.

After falling behind 2-0, the Athletics manufactured two runs on perfect bunts by Pete Oswald and Pat "Mr. Hustle" Doonan knotting the score at 2 after five innings.

In the top of the sixth inning, Cody Morgan drilled a one-hop shot to the left-field fence for a lead-off double. Danny Sullivan, who had made big play after big play all year long for the Athletics, tried to sacrifice Morgan to third base but DJ Silvia would not allow it to happen. Morgan was still at second with one out. The second member of the "Brother Act," Thomas Morgan, stepped to the plate and promptly delivered a frozen rope hit up the middle to bring in the go ahead run for the A's.

The veteran Dodger team would not go quietly, though. Sam DeGiacomo battled pitcher A's hurler Chris Bryan and got a well-earned two-out walk. Another 10-year old rookie, Chris Rose, applied more heat by laying down a perfect bunt, which he beat out This put the tying and winning runs on base for the Dodgers with 12-year old slugger Kevin Roach coming to bat.

Roach drilled a bullet line drive down that appeared ticketed for the right field corner until first baseman Thomas Morgan pulled it in to seal the championship for "The Hustling Athletics!"

In the opinion of all of the parents and fans, however, there were no losers at Barnes Field on that, just two great teams.

Row 2000 provides experiences to last a lifetime

By Joe Reardon
CORRESPONDENT

The last week has been a double-barreled maritime adventure for Cohasset's Bea Rankin. The 17-year-old Cohasset High senior-to-be has been around the water long enough to appreciate the combination Row 2000 competition and arrival of the Tall Ships to Boston as a maritime enthusiast's dream.

Rankin, who has been an avid rower and sailor since the seventh grade, found the sight of the 140 ships heading towards Boston Harbor was inspirational and nothing short of spectacular.

Rankin, herself, spent last Christmas vacation as part of the crew sailing the Spirit of Massachusetts to Puerto Rico. As impressive a ship as the Spirit is, Rankin said it paled in comparison to many the 140 ships from 35 countries that sailed into Boston Harbor on Tuesday.

"They were huge; bigger than I ever thought they'd be," said Rankin. "They were really cool."

Rankin spent 45 minutes rowing as part of a six-person crew from Windmill Point off Hull Gut to Lovells Island to view the Parade of Ships. The island was already mobbed with viewers and there were a countless number of boats in the water, looking for optimum positions to take in the impressive ships up close.

Rankin spent 4-1/2 hours on the island and said it was worth every minute. "I had binoculars, so I was able to get a good look at them," she said. "The ships were beautiful."

Another Cohasset resident, 49-year-old Bill Ketchum agreed that the ships heading into Boston wouldn't soon be forgotten in his mind.

"The Tall Ships were very impressive," said Ketchum, who also rows for the Lifesaving Museum. "There were people out there on the island who were experts on the ships. It was quite a fun time."

"The Tall Ships were very impressive. There were people out there on the island who were experts on the ships. It was quite a fun time."-
Cohasset resident Bill Ketchum

Ketchum grew up in Hingham and learned how to row after becoming an accomplished sailor. He rows 2-3 times a week, more for fun and exercise than to garner first-place trophies. The Row 2000 has provided him the perfect mix of competition, fun and socializing with fellow rowers.

"For me, the real fun was rowing with the different groups," said Ketchum. "It was fun to hear their experiences."

The day was a relaxing one for Rankin, who spent Saturday and Sunday racing large row boats in Row 2000, one of just many events put on by the Hull Lifesaving Museum. The five-day rowing competition has drawn boats from all over New England, as well as 11 rowers from both Ireland and the Netherlands.

"It's in honor of Sail 2000," said Barbie Guild, associate director of Cohasset Swim Team blows Duxbury out of the water

For the Cohasset Swim Team, summer began with a resounding victory over Duxbury's Aquadux. In a scaled-down version of the regular Friday afternoon marathon swim meets, Aquadux's smaller line-up was balanced by a trimmed down Cohasset turnout.

With more than half the Cohasset team on the bench, there was some disappointment, especially among rookies. But there could be no disappointment with their teammates' performance. In this first outing of the season, Cohasset brought home close to a 300-point victory over Duxbury.

The meet got off to a good start with Cohasset making excellent times in the 100 yards medley relay. In the 8 and under group, both the boys and girls took first and second places (boys 1st: Queenan, Murphy, Doonan, Carrier; 2nd: Buckley, Campbell, Poh, Durkin; girls 1st: Fontaine, Madge, Lehr, Zappoto; 2nd: Sullivan, Teague, Jennings, Mahoney).

The 10 and under boys followed suit, finishing first and second, while the girls finished first and third (boys 1st: Hunt, Drybanski, Cunningham, Doonan; 2nd: Poh, Gritzan, Shipp, Hurley; girls 1st: Sacks, Fortin, Herman, Mahoney; 3rd: Campbell, Costa, Lehr, Teague). Building on this early success, the 12 and under girls and boys again took first and second positions (boys: 1st Herman, Roach, Conway, McCarthy; 2nd: Hospod, Faber, Daly, Gammon; girls 1st: Daley, Shea, Garber, Durkin; 2nd: Harrington, Sida, James, Wheelwright).

As the 100 yards medleys were completed, Cohasset led Duxbury by 40 points. The 17 and under boys extended this lead further, with a win and a third place in the 200 yards medley, while the girls took first, third and fourth places to end the medley relay events with 64 points to Duxbury's 16 (boys 1st: McCarthy, Faber, Ingber, Bilton; 3rd: Hurley, Roach, Flynn, Blackburn; girls 1st: Jerome, Anderson, Gaber, Lehr; 3rd Bugley, Foley, Larson, Faber; 4th: Regan, Weston, Mello, Ogrodnick).

The individual events began with the 10 and under 50 yard freestyle where Cohasset boys and girls took first, second and third places (boys 1st: Poh, R.; 2nd: Doonan, P.; 3rd: Cunningham, C.; girls 1st: Mahoney, C.; 2nd: Teague, M.; 3rd: Sacks, M.). The 12 and under boys repeated their success taking first, second and third in the 100 yards individual medley (boys 1st: McCarthy, D.; 2nd: Conway, C.; 3rd: Roach, K.). And the 12 and under girls came close, finishing in first, third and fourth place (girls 1st: Durkin, L., 3rd: Shea, E., 4th: Madge, M.). The 14 and under boys achieved a win and a third place in this event, while the girls just missed a first place, but took second, third and fourth positions (boys 1st: McCarthy, W.; 3rd: Flynn, C.; girls 2nd: Jerome, E.; 3rd Anderson, C.; 4th: Foley, T.).

The 17 and under girls did the same and the boys again just missed the win, but held onto second and third places (girls 2nd: Garber, R.; 3rd: Regan, D.; 4th: Faber, A.. boys 2nd: Faber, S., 3rd: Roach, J.).

With 16 races completed, Cohasset had extended their lead by a further 25 points.

The freestyle events came next, and in both the 8 and under and 10 and under 25 yard races, Cohasset boys and girls finished in first, second and third places (boys, 8 and under, 1st: Durkin, T.; 2nd: Carrier, J.; 3rd: Murphy, J.; boys, 10 and under, 1st: Hunt, A.; 2nd: Doonan, P.; 3rd: Drybanski, J.; girls, 8 and under, 1st: Lehr, V.; 2nd: Zappolo, C.; 3rd: Jennings, M.; girls, 10 and under, 1st: Herman, E., 2nd: Mahoney, C; 3rd: Saltonstall, C.).

In the 12 and under 50-yard freestyle, the girls again took first, second and third and the boys finished with a win and a fourth and fifth place (girls 1st: Garber, C.; 2nd: Daley, M.; 3: Wheelwright, J.; boys 1st Herman, A; 4th: Daly B; 5th: Hospod T.)

The 14 under groups also secured wins in their section, the girls making first, second and sixth place, and the boys finishing first and third (girls 1st Lehr, R.; 2nd: Larson, J.; 6th Harrington, B.; boys 1st: Bilton, B.; 3rd: Simms, C.). The 50-yard freestyle medleys finished with the 17 and under boys taking second and third positions, and the girls finishing in second, third and fourth place (boys 2nd: Ingber, D.; 3rd: Hurley, T.; girls 2nd: Bugley, A.; 3rd: Henderson, C.; 4th: Sanchez, A.). Cohasset was now leading by 117 points.

In the 25 yard butterfly, both the 8 and under and the 10 and under boys again dominated their races, taking first, second and third places (boys, 8 and under, 1st Doonan, B.; 2nd: Poh, E.; 3rd: Murphy, J.; boys, 10 and under, 1st Cunningham, C.; 2nd: Shipp, A.; 3rd: Gritzan, K.).

The 8 and under girls just missed first place but took second, third and fifth (girls 2nd: Lehr, V.; 3rd: Madge, K.; 5th: Jennings, M.).

The 10 and under girls, again, while not getting home first, finished second, third and fourth, as did the 12 and under girls (girls, 10 and under, 2nd: Herman, E.; 3rd: Lehr, S.; 4th: Campbell, A.; girls, 12 and under, 2nd: Garber, C.; 3rd: James, K.; 4th: Wheelwright, J.).

The 12 and under boys, however, secured a win, and also held on to second and fourth place (boys 1st McCarthy, D.; 2nd: Daley, C.; 4th: Faber, C.). In the boys 14 and under heat, only one Cohasset swimmer competed and finished a very close second (McCarthy, W.) while the 14 and under girls took first, second and third place (girls 1st Garber, R.; 2nd: Mello, M.; 3rd: Henderson, C.).

In the final heats of the 50 yard butterfly, the 17 and under boys finished second and third and the girls finished, second, fourth and fifth (boys 2nd: Ingber, D.; 3rd: Blackburn, C.; girls 2nd: Afshar, y.; 4th: Lehr, B.; 5th Ogrodnick, M.).

Going into the 25-yard breaststroke, Cohasset had accumulated 233 points. Once again, both the girls and boys got off to a tremendous start. In the boys and girls 8 and under and the boys 10 and under races, Cohasset finished in first, second and third places (boys, 8 and under, 1st Doonan, B.; 2nd: Campbell, B.; 3rd: Buckley, T.; girls, 8 and under, 1st Sullivan, O.; 2nd: Madge, K.; 3rd: Teague, K.; boys, 10 and under, 1st Hunt, A.; 2nd: Gritzan, K.; 3rd: Drybanski, J.).

The 10 and under girls also won their race, and took third and fourth places (girls 1st Fortin, S.; 3rd: Costa, A.; 4th Lehr, S.).

In the 50 yard breaststroke, the 12 and under and the 14 and under girls once again dominated their races, finishing first, second and third (girls, 12 and under, 1st: Durkin, L.; 2nd: Sida, C.; 3rd: Shea, E.; girls, 14 and under, 1st: Anderson, C.; 2nd: Faber, A.; 3rd: Foley; T.).

The 12 and under boys also put in a fine performance to finish second, third and fourth (boys 2nd: Conway, C.; 3rd: Roach, K.; 4th: Faber, C.).

The 14 and under boys also just missed a win, but took second and fourth places (2nd: Bilton, B.; 4th: Simms, C.).

The breaststroke heats were nicely rounded off with a win and second place for the 17 and under boys (1st Faber, S.; 2nd: Roach, J.) and a third and fourth for the 17 and under girls (3rd: Afshar, Y.; 4th: Weston, E.). The overall score had now reached 295 and Duxbury was trailing by 212 points.

The backstroke heats brought continued success for Cohasset. The boys and girls in the 8 and under group both took first, second and third places in their 25-yard heats (boys 1st Queenanm C.; 2nd: Buckley, T.; 3rd: Carrier, J.; girls 1st: Sullivan, O.; 2nd: Fontaine, E.; 3rd: Zappolo, C.). The 10 and under boys did the same, and although not first to finish, the 10 and under girls came in second and third (boys 1st Poh, R.; 2nd: Shipp, A.; 3rd Hurley, P.; girls 2nd: Sacks, M.; 3rd: Campbell, A.). In the fifty yard races, although times were a little more varied, the 12 and under girls held first, second and third positions in their heat (1st Daley, M.; 2nd: Shea, E. 3rd: Harrington, K.), and Cohasset won the girls 14 and under and boys 17 and under races (girls, 14 and under, 1st Jerome, E.; 3rd: Weston, E.; 5th: Henderson, C.; boys, 17 and under, 1st: Blackburn, C.; 2nd: Hurley, T.). The 14 and under boys came in second and fourth (boys, 14 and under, 2nd: Flynn, C.; 4th: Simms, C.) and the 17 and under girls came in second, third and fourth (2nd: Larson, J.; 3rd: Bugley, A.; 4th: Sanchez, A.), taking Cohasset into the final free 100 and 200 yard relays with more than a comfortable lead.

In the final phase of the meet, the boys and girls of each age group won their events, taking first and second places, across the board, for both the 100 and the 200 yard relays, bringing the meet to a highly successful conclusion (boys, 8 and under, 1st: Durkin, Murphy, Carrier, Doonan; 2nd: Buckley, Campbell, Poh, Queenan; girls, 8 and under, 1st: Madge, Jennings, Lehr, Zappolo; 2nd: Fontaine, Mahoney, Teague, Sullivan; boys, 10 and under, 1st: Doonan, Poh, Drybanski, Hunt; 2nd: Cunningham, Gritzan, Hurley, Shipp; girls, 10 and under, 1st: Mahoney; Lehr, Saltonstall, Herman; 2nd: Campbell, Fortin, Sacks, Teague; boys, 12 and under, 1st: Conway, Faber, McCarthy, Hernan; 2nd: Daly, Gammon, Hospod, Roach; girls, 12 and under, 1st Garber, Wheelwright, Daley, Durkin; 2nd: James, Madge, Sida, Harrington; boys, 17 and under, 1st Bilton, Faber, McCarthy, Ingber; 2nd Flynn, Simms, Blackburn, Roach; girls, 17 and under, 1st: Lehr, Jerome, Garber, Anderson; 2nd: Faber, Larson, Afshar, Regan; 3rd: Foley, Henderson, Ogrodnick, Sanchez).

Congratulations go to the swimmers for their wonderful performances, and to Allison Hughes and Michael Monaghan for getting the team off to such a tremendous start.

Further congratulations are due to swimmers, parents and the team's steering committee for their early success in this season's first two fund-raisers. Already, almost $3,000 has been raised through an exciting Family Fun Day, and a strenuous "Swimathon" event. Plans for how this money will be spent to improve facilities at the Swim Center can be seen in the Center's entrance hall. Further contributions, ideas or offers of volunteer support can be made at the center's office or through one of the committee members.

We look forward to another great season for the Cohasset Swim Team and a great summer at our town pool.

Row 2000 provides experiences to last a lifetime

the Lifesaving Museum and one of the event's organizers with director Ed McCabe.

Rankin competed in three races on Saturday and one off Brewster Island on Sunday. The races on Saturday included and out-and-back, one-turn competition, a short sprint of just over 100 yards and a race of just under a nautical mile (approximately 1.6 miles). Rankin was part of the winning crew in the short sprint and the triangular-shaped course on Sunday that pitted three groups – the men, women, and kids – against one another.

Many competitors were part of established crews, but to make the competition more even, names were pulled out of a hat to make up the new crews. Rankin loved the move because it enabled her to row with an array of people she otherwise would never have met.

The highlight for Rankin was rowing with several of the Irish competitors, whom she found fascinating. For starters, the Irish rowers spoke Gaelic, their native tongue, to one another. Rankin found the Irish conversing with one another particularly interesting.

"They speak in Gaelic and it was really awesome," she said.

The Irish boats, too, presented a touch of culture shock for Rankin. Unlike the American boats, which are made of wood, the Irish crafts have a wooden skeleton but the shell is made up of specially treated leather.

Ketchum said the group from the Netherlands were national champions and told of several races where the fields were swollen with more than 200 boats. The rowers gave pointers to the various locals they went out with and were extremely outgoing and friendly.

"That was something for me to see that level of rowing," Ketchum said. "Novices were getting training tips from the Dutch National Championship team."

Wednesday and Thursday were scheduled "free days" allowing those participating in the Row 2000 the chance to head into the Boston's waterfront and tour the various ships.

Rankin said she was looking forward to Friday's youth row, beginning at the Children's Museum in Boston. Rankin spent much of last winter rowing indoors at the MIT Boathouse and said she "loves rowing up in Boston."

What has made the Row 2000 event such a memorable experience for Rankin has been the interaction between the adults and the kids. She said the sport is such that there is a mutual respect between rowers, regardless of age or ability. Gloating over wins is rare. Instead, camaraderie is established at most rowing events.

"I got to meet a lot of older people that row," said Rankin. "I feel like part of a family."

Ketchum, too, said the mix of rowers and crews made for an interesting event. "One of the youngest boys I met was 12 years old," he said. "On some boats, you're getting people with 60 years of experience."

and everybody in it. We finally got around to letting him know recently, as he was named the Mariner's Citizen of the Year and the District C Athletic Director of the Year. Small repayment for the guy who ponied up a sum of reportedly $180,000 for a new school. Small repayment for the guy who invited his high school class to Disney World for a reunion. Not nearly enough repayment for the guy who gave his all to this town and its people.

"He'd do anything for you," said Coach Ron Ford, repeating a phrase heard often in the past week. "I have never met anybody with a bigger heart. I loved the fact that he was always keeping us on our toes. He always took care of everybody ... He's special."

Ford, who coached under and taught with Chatterton for nine years, sat in Chatterton's office on Monday, reminiscing about the man who had worked at CHS for 32 years. "Everything centered around the guy. He was everybody's captain. This place was him. It's just never going to be the same. There is no bigger symbol of Cohasset than him."

"He was an unbelievable person," echoes David Lincoln, a high school teammate and fellow member of the Class of 1959. "There wasn't a thing he wouldn't do for you."

Kenny Sargent was another Chatterton teammate and contemporary, and chuckles as he recalls striking out Chatterton, a ballplayer that was good enough to get a tryout with the Mets organization, three times in one game. But it was Chatterton's charitable nature that Sargent will remember most: "If he could help you out, he would."

Jack DeLorenzo, a friend and colleague of Chatterton's for 14 years, continues the theme. "He had that generosity and he would open his heart to anybody. He would've done anything for anyone at any time. And Clarkie loved Cohasset."

"We're really going to miss the guy," Ford says.

More than a thousand people showed up on Thursday because they already missed the guy who would do anything for you. They missed the guy who would pull them into his office to talk about the game or the field or the reunion. They missed the guy who took people out to lunch, whose gym classes sometimes consisted of walking leisurely around the track and talking sports, the guy who never did a mean thing.

Everybody misses Clark Chatterton. "He was a real unique person," says Sargent. Everybody misses him because they know that his friend is right, that Chatterton was a classic, a true original, and that we'll never see another like him.

Jim O'Sullivan, a 1999 CHS graduate, worked as sports correspondent for the Cohasset Mariner during his years at the middle-high school..

Reflections of Clark

Jeff Grantatino (Scituate AD)- Clark was always the ring leader with us in a lot of ways. He had a great perspective on things. He knew that what we were doing was for the kids and you could tell he always had that in mind. He also kept things light and was a lot of fun to be around. We're all really going to miss him.

Bill Barges (Hingham A.D)- Every A.D I've known has always spoken highly of him. He really was a great man. You could just always count on him to do the right thing. He always did more than was asked for him, such as serving as our Treasurer and arranging banquets for retiring Athletic Directors. This is a really tough time. We'd heard that he was doing somewhat better, and then this just happened so suddenly.

Al Smith (East Bridgewater AD)- He was one my best friends and I'm devastated by this news. I can't say enough good things about him. If I had to sum him up in one word I'd just say "benevolence". He just did so much for those involved in athletics with him, and so many there people too. And he had such a winning personality. People just naturally seemed to gravitate towards him. When he spoke, everyone listened because they really wanted to hear what he was thinking. I'm sure his loss is going to hit a lot of people hard.

Last year, the harbor area was briefly closed after a significant rain fall produced fecal coliform counts that were "barely" over the danger level.

Each test costs the town $20. With five samples sent to the lab for a 12-week span during the summer months, testing the quality of water runs Cohasset $1,200 a year.

Godzik, who has been the town's health agent for 15 years, said that the bacteria levels on the beaches is a far-cry from the days when Boston Harbor was polluted and the Quincy sewerage plant kept overrunning. "A lot of that pollution came down this way," he said.

Now with Boston Harbor close to being deemed "swimmable," and the overrun problems in Quincy fixed, Cohasset is blessed with near-pristine swimming conditions.

The state's Department of Public Health does not require weekly testings, though its recommends it. The Environmental League of Massachusetts, the Surfrider Foundation and MassPirg recently released a report saying that nearly half of the state's beaches — both fresh and salt water — are not tested once a week.

"The data clearly show there are health threats to Massachusetts bathers," said Pam DiBona, legislative director for the Environmental League. "More than half of the state's beaches are not tested every week, yet we know that during heavy rain million of gallons of contaminated storm water and sewerage are entering local water bodies. It's clear that there is a need for more frequent monitoring."

A bill before the Massachusetts Legislature called the Beaches Bill (H. 3134) would require more frequent water quality testing of the state's beaches.

The bill, if passed, would have no effect on Cohasset, which already meets the proposed requirements. Cohasset doesn't post the results after each test — unless a beach must be closed — but Godzik said that is not because the town is hiding information, but that "closures are so few and far between, it doesn't justify doing anything like that."

Abington, and learn from their dealings with the MBTA.

Town Manager Mark Haddad also said he would contact Scituate's town administrator and selectmen chairman to discuss the possibility of combining the towns' resources.

Mitigation committee member Martin Corry suggested to selectmen that the only way the town will be able to successfully deal with the MBTA is to establish some sort of leverage. "If you have no leverage, you are not going to get what you want," he said.

Cohasset still owns the railroad right-of-way through town. Corry said if the town declares the rail bed recreational space, a two-thirds majority vote would be needed in the state legislature to allow the MBTA to take the land. This is where, according to Corry, the state's poor spending habits, particularly on transportation projects, could come into play. Corry pointed out stories in the daily papers that the Big Dig overrun is now up to $2.2 billion, and the Middlesex Turnpike expansion cost has suddenly jumped from costing $200 million to $425 million. He said that if legislators start thinking "we're bleeding dough," the land seizure could possibly not be approved, effectively killing Greenbush for the time being.

Selectmen Fred Koed worried that if the town did change the zoning, and then received everything it wanted from the MBTA for mitigation, the town would be unable to undo the zoning change. Corry seemed to think that if that happened, as long as the district's representatives said it was all right, the legislature would approve the land release to the MBTA.

A similar zoning change was voted upon at Town Meeting in 1998, and though a majority voted for it, the required two-thirds margin was not reached, and the article failed.

Selectmen chairman Thomas Callahan said that he believes the zoning change could pass, but only if presented in the right way. He said the move was seen in 1998 as the town being obstructionist and anti-train. "As soon as we find the train is coming, it doesn't mean we shouldn't try to protect ourselves from the adverse impact," he said. Callahan added that town had been very cooperative with the MBTA, but said being cooperative had proven to be "fruitless."

"We need leverage," he said. "By changing zoning we get leverage as a way of protecting ourselves. I think the townspeople will accept that."

Gruber also presented the board with the results of the mitigation committee meeting on Monday. The committee came up with a number strategies to deal with the MBTA, and Gruber asked the board to "consider them very carefully."

The first suggestion was the retention of an experienced real estate attorney, who could give the town advice on real estate property law, including how to receive a fair real estate value appraisal. "He would also advise us on the right inherent with the property and be able to tell us what our options are."

One fear Gruber had with the state owning the right-of-way, is the potential for the MBTA to allow non-passenger usage of the rail. "We need to know what rights we can sell and what rights we can hold back," he said.

Selectman Michael Sullivan, who attended the Monday night meeting, said the committee also discussed the possibility of putting out for a Request For Proposal (RFP) for a general consultant. "No one has enough knowledge," he said. "No one in town does, because no one's been through it."

Corry said that the town, in general, "doesn't have a clue what's behind some of the T's decisions. It's very frustrating."

The general consensus at the committee's meeting Monday night is that those involved with the project, despite spending hundreds of hours dealing with the issues associated with the installation of the Greenbush line, just don't know enough about railroad engineering and design. The committee's hope is that a consultant could be hired and be available to answer any type of questions that might arise during the restoration process of the Greenbush line.

Gruber said an example of the need for a consultant is the debate over two or four-quad gates at grade crossings. The town prefers a four-quad gate system because a two-quad gate would require a berm between lanes, resulting in the taking of more property for street widening, as well as affecting traffic patterns. However, the state won't install four-quad gates until their proven to be safe. Gruber said the town needs a consultant to help them sort through the legal reasoning behind issues such as this.

Gruber said he would put together a description for the consultant.

Callahan felt such a person would be difficult to find, but the majority of the board wanted to at least put the RFP out .

The committee also will communicate with other South Shore towns that have already gone through what Cohasset has gone through, in order to develop its own strategy for dealing with the train.

Greenbush is the proposed third line of the Old Colony Rail project. Two other lines have already been implemented.

"We want to find out what went well and what didn't," said Gruber.

Sullivan added that the town should also find out what problems the other towns encountered after the trains started rolling.

Haddad said he hopes to set up a meeting between Scituate and Cohasset officials in order to discuss the combining of resources while dealing with the MBTA. "I think there are a lot of joint issues with the towns," he said pointing out issues such as noise and vibration mitigation. "There's a lot to work together on."

Callahan said the meeting would be to see if the towns are "on the same page with their approaches to the T." He said that since the towns do not have any leverage at the moment, "strength in numbers can certainly give us some."

"We want to see if we can work in concert a bit," Callahan explained. He hopes the towns would be able to share the expense arising from legal document searches or from lobbying efforts.

Trial period for parking at Government Island

Acting on a recommendation by the harbor committee, selectmen approved a trial period that allows lobster wholesalers to temporarily park at Government Island for the purpose of purchasing lobsters from the town's fishing fleet.

Town Manager Mark Hadadd said he saw no problem with the idea and didn't see a trial period as necessary. But selectman Mike Sullivan said a trial period should be held, "only because the harbor committee recommended one."

The trial period will continue until September.

In other Government Island parking news, the town's attempt at creating two visitor parking spots has ended. The signs were originally located down by the Cohasset Sailing Club, but after club members complained, the spots were moved to down by the town pier. However, that location was also met with a thumbs down and the spots were moved for a third time to their current location, in front of the Harbormaster's shed. But on Sunday night, selectmen chairman Tom Callahan was presented a petition signed by 108 people requesting the spots be moved, again.

The nomadic visitors parking signs had become a running joke at selectmen's meetings recently, and Haddad said at Tuesday's meeting that the signs should just be taken down for good. "Let's just take them down, it's not worth it," he said. "Just take them down, I'm sick of this issue."

A perfect mention

Movie reference creates swell of interest in local song

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

The perfect storm couldn't have come at a better time — or, more accurately, the movie "A Perfect Storm," featuring mega-star George Clooney, and Dorchester native Mark Wahlberg.

In the movie about the famous "No Name Storm" on Halloween in 1991, Clooney mentions "Ol' Scollay Square" to his crew. With that mention, lightbulbs went off in individual's heads and the regionally well-known novelty song, "Remember Ol' Scollay Square" by Cohasset producer Rik Tinory came to life once again.

According to Tinory, since Clooney's mention, the "phone has been ringing off the hook" with people requesting his 1977 hit song, which, coincidentally, at the time was being re-mastered, along with three other Boston songs for the Tall Ships festivities this week in Boston Harbor.

Radio stations and personalities including WPLM's Ron Della Chiesa, WRKO's Howie Carr, WATD, and WZLX contacted Tinory over the past weeks looking for copies of the song.

"It is a wonderful vintage Boston song," said Ed Perry, owner of WATD in Marshfield. "I'm thrilled to see him put it out on CD...It's a nice song and he did a wonderful job with it."

The song, which was written, sung and produced by Tinory in 1977, with the hopes of it being performed and released by Jimmy Durante, instead found itself into the hands of Ken Stahl, an announcer for WCVB-TV. Stahl was at Tinory's Cohasset studio and asked him if he had anything interesting to be played on April Fools Day. Tinory played "Ol' Scollay Square" for Stahl, and the next day it was played on WVCB's Good Day morning show.

From there, said Tinory, it was picked up by Jerry Williams who was filling in for Dave Maynard at WBZ-AM, and then by WBZ's long-time overnight host Larry Glick. The song became a regional hit and Tinory said he sold thousands of copies.

The song recalls the burlesque days of Scollay Square, and is performed with Tinory on vocals, in front of a Dixieland swing band. The infamous square, which housed the famous Howard Theatre, was razed in the 1960's by the Boston Redevelopment Authority. It was replaced by the much-maligned brick landscape now known as Boston City Hall Plaza.

"People were very unhappy with the decision," said Tinory, who remembered the square from trips into the North End with his father. "I wish they had reconstructed it into a tourist attraction. If they had, Fanueil Hall would cease to exist as we know it."

The resurrection of the song was well timed for Tinory. His song "Boston: The Only Place for Me" was scheduled to be played at the pavilion at Commonwealth Pier during the parade of the Tall Ships Tuesday. On Monday night, Tinory met with the Captain Michael H. Miller, the commanding officer of the USS John F. Kennedy, a 1,052-foot aircraft carrier, and played another of his songs called "Southie: My Home Town." According to Tinory, Miller loved the song and said he expected the song to be played on the aircraft carrier's decks. He also reported that Dixie Whatley of WCVB-TV played 'Boston' during her broadcast the same night.

Rik Tinory relaxes at his studio in Cohasset.

The recent resurgence of interest in his songs should not be considered as a comeback for the producer. He has been recording and producing some of show business' biggest stars since the '60s, including George Burns, Bob Hope, Carol Channing and Tom Jones, Jimi Hendrix and Air Supply. He also produced an album for the NFL's Pittsburgh Steelers in the 1970's. He said the owner of the team chose him because he knew nothing about football. "I was sitting next to Terry Bradshaw and didn't even know it," he said. He also was the producer for the live recording of Pope John Paul II's October, 1979 Mass on Boston Common. It was the world's largest live recording, with 850,000 in attendance. Tinory was also the co-owner of a publishing company, with Don Costa, who arranged the Frank Sinatra songs 'My Way' and 'New York, New York.'

His recording studio played host to rock band Aerosmith during 1988 and 1989 while the group recorded its album 'Pump,' which won a Grammy Award in 1991. Aerosmith also recorded its follow-up album 'Get a Grip' in the Cohasset studio.

He continues to record and produce local bands. According to Perry, "he's one of the few who pays attention to new and local bands. My feeling is, if he sends us something, it's going to be played."

The album Tinory just finished remastering features the songs 'Boston', 'Scollay Square' and 'Southie', as well as a new song called "For All We Know." The song is a ballad which Tinory said was written with the notion of all the Tall Ships' sailors leaving behind romances, never to be seen again.

The CD is now available at Tinory's website www.riktinory.com.

Children's show at Music Circus

The Cohasset Recreation Department will hold the Music Circus registrations for "The Incredible Magic Circus" on Tuesday, July 18. Music Circus Children's Show registrations will be open to children in the Playground Program and the show date for "The Incredible Magic Circus" is Thursday, Aug. 3.

Music Circus registrations are held at the recreation office, first floor, town hall. Registrations will be held from 9 to noon and again from 1 to 7 p.m. All tickets for the Music Circus are $6.

Registrations are held each Tuesday according to the above times, two weeks prior to the actual show date.

Tanglewood trip

South Shore Conservatory is sponsoring a day trip to Tanglewood on Sunday, August 6, to hear the Serge and Olga Koussevitzky Memorial Concert.

The concert features The Boston Symphony Orchestra in collaboration with The Tanglewood Festival Chorus and the PALS Children's Chorus in a performance of Benjamin Britten's War Requiem. Featured soloists are Christine Goerke, soprano, Anthony Dean Griffey, tenor, and Thomas Quasthoff, bass-baritone.

Participants travel by air-conditioned motor coach to Tanglewood. Along the way, a conservatory representative will give a brief description and background of the featured music and performers. The noon arrival allows plenty of time for participants to enjoy a gourmet box lunch and a stroll around the lawns and buildings of Tanglewood before the 2:30 concert. Refreshments will be served on the return ride.

The $98 per person cost includes concert tickets, round-trip transportation, box lunch and refreshments for the return. The bus leaves from The Ellison Center for the Arts in Duxbury at 8:30 am, and then from the Rockland commuter parking lot at Rt. 3 and Rt. 228 at 9 am. The bus returns at 8:30 p.m. Call 781-749-7565, ext. 24 for registration and additional information.

Comet viewing

The South Shore Astronomical Society will host a viewing program featuring the recently discovered comet, Comet Linear. Comet Linear was discovered by MIT's Lincoln Laboratory Near Earth Asteroid Research Telescope. The comet should be easily visible late July.

Friday, July 21, the South Shore Astronomical Society will have telescopes set up for this event at Centennial Park, Pine Street Norwell. The program begins at dusk, in addition to many telescopes, members will be on hand to explain this phenomenon. In the event of bad weather the event will take place Saturday, July 22.

Zoning board questions two-family home status

includes Arrowood Road pre-dates the town's zoning laws and consists of about 40 lots that the town offered to veterans returning from World War II for $100 each. The deeds to those lots state that single- or two-family residences can be constructed there.

Aaron's father, Sam Hassan, a World War II veteran, bought the property at 15 Arrowood Road, built a house there and converted it to a two-family in 1958 when he added two bedrooms, a bathroom and kitchen upstairs. Over the years several of the Hassan children and other relatives stayed there. In 1980 Sam Hassan sold the house to Aaron, who subsequently rented it out to non-family members.

The zoning board said the Hassans would have to "prove" the house existed as a two-family house before the 1969 by-law that changed the required lot size for two-family homes in that residential district. Although legal when the house was built, the Hassans' lot is too small for a two-family house under the 1969 by-law.

An incredulous Sam Hassan, who ironically was a member of the zoning board back in 1955 when the town's first zoning laws were created, showed the board his deed and explained again and again when the built the house, when he converted it and how it was used.

Zoning board member Anson Whealler pointed out that it was clear when Sam Hassan converted the house it was with the intention of using it as a two family.

But according to Egan, it was clear to him that until 1980, the apartment was used solely by family members.

"When I was asked to interpret it, the fact your family lived in a house with two kitchens does not constitute a two-family," he told the Hassans. Leo Kurtz, 21 Arrowwood Road, who is also a WWII veteran, backed the Hassans.

Sam Hassan, a World War II veteran, bought the property at 15 Arrowood Road, built a house there and converted it to a two-family in 1958 when he added two bedrooms, a bathroom and kitchen upstairs.

Kurtz said he also has a two-family that has been used by his seven children and their families over the years.

Michael Dick, 2 Arrowwood Road, who complained to the building inspector, said using the town by-law was his family's only recourse because the situation had become "intolerable."

Dick, whose wife Linda Hewitt Dick is a member of the zoning board and recused herself from the hearing, said it was his understanding that if a non-conforming use lapses then grandfathering is no longer valid and the use must follow the by-law.

He said town census records indicate the house was used as a single family home for many years.

Dick, who purchased his home in 1993, likens the apartment in his home to an "in-law apartment" and considers his house to be a single-family dwelling.

He said the use of the Hassan home over past two-to-three years had become "intolerable" because of the tenants' behavior.

Aaron Hassan took issue with Dick's claims and wondered why he had never formally complained to the police if things were that bad.

"Your making it out to sound like it isn't," he said.

Zoning board chairman Woody Chittick, who stressed that the issue was not "good vs. bad tenants," said in his mind, there was evidence on both sides.

"I have to chew on this a little bit," he said.

Members agreed that the issue was important, complicated and could set a precedent.

Sam Hassan said there were other homes in the area used as two-family houses.

"You'll be opening up a can of worms if you vote against us," he said.

The zoning board will deliberate on the issue at its Aug. 7 meeting.

trench. After the pipe is in the ground, the contaminated soil will be used as backfill.

Noonan said that work is "tentatively" scheduled around the clock for five days. He said noise should not be a factor for local residents, but added they may be disturbed by flashing signs.

Due to the heavy equipment needed for the project, as well as the treatment truck and the area needed for soil storage on the street, representatives from D'Amico notified Noonan of the need to shut the street down Tuesday afternoon. Noonan said traffic will be detoured along Spring Street during the closure. Access to the library will not be blocked. Homeowners will still have access to their houses, he said.

Noonan said police will be posted at either end of the street during the day and around the clock at the work site. Tutela said a site professional will monitor the work.

At the selectmen's meeting Tuesday, board chairman Tom Callahan expressed his concern about traffic in town due to sewer construction. Part of King Street is currently closed, as well as one lane on Route 3A is blocked by work crews at the end of Tupelo Road.

There will be no difference in the type of pipes used at the contaminated site, except for a different style of gaskets and a rubber casing around the pipes to prevent seepage, Tutela Engineering said.

Police made 31 arrests in June

June was a very busy month for the Cohasset Police Department, Police Chief Brian Noonan said. There were 31arrests, 10 for motor vehicle violations, six for minor transporting liquor, four for warrants, two for possession of controlled substance, two for distribution of controlled substance, two for conspiracy to violate controlled substance laws, two for breaking and entering, two for operating under the influence, and finally one for assault and battery.

During the month of June the police department investigated 16 motor vehicle accidents, six of which resulted in injuries. There were 205 motor vehicle citations issued, totaling $5,355 in fines. Additionally, there where 182 parking tickets issued for $4,925 in fines.

Also, in June the Emergency Dispatch Center received a total of 804 calls for police services, of those 107 were emergency 911 calls.

Officer Brian Curran also completed a three-day COBWEB Bike training course sponsored by the Massachusetts Criminal Justice Training Council, Noonan said.

Hedlund decries negative tactics

Sen. Robert L.

Decrying the negative campaign tactics of one of his opponents, Sen. Robert L. Hedlund Monday encouraged the field of candidates to practice restraint in their political maneuvering and public comments in the days and weeks ahead for the benefit of voters.

The comments focused on the Senator's participation in the passage of the Transportation Bond Bill.

"Unlike others running for state senator in this district this election year, my position on Greenbush has been very clear. I have opposed the reestablishment of the line at every opportunity afforded me over the past seven years," Hedlund said. "Apparently one of my opponents believes that spreading misinformation, and in some cases outright lies, about my record will obfuscate the fact that he is not willing to take a stand on the issue itself.

"The good news coming out of the passage of the Transportation Bond Bill is that the amendment I co-sponsored to provide Scituate, Marshfield and Duxbury access to the RIDE, a transit service for elderly and disabled residents, was approved. Under this provision, each of these towns would have the option to join with other communities and form a regional transit service, or create their own."

Bradley runs race

Garrett Bradley

Former Plymouth County prosecutor and current democratic candidate for state representative Garrett Bradley ran in the annual 4th of July Road Race in Hingham with a group of his supporters sporting Bradley for state representative T-shirts, the team finished with smiles and a bit of exhaustion.

Bradley admitted, "I thought I was in good shape with all the door knocking I have been doing in the district, but maintaining a running pace for almost five miles was strenuous. Knowing that I had a team of supporters with me, however, was all I needed to keep me going."

Holden on debates

Mike Holden

Candidate for state representative Mike Holden has contacted his opponent, local media outlets, the League of Women Voters and the Democratic Town Committees in Hingham, Hull and Cohasset in an effort to air debates between the two Democratic candidates for State Representative. In a letter last week to his opponent, Holden wrote, "As I am sure you would agree, the voters will be well served to gain a better understanding of our respective candidacies in a series of debates." Holden further explained that he has already heard back from Aaron Kitersky of WATD radio expressing an interest in conducting an on-air debate in late August/early September and offering to moderate additional debates in other locations. Holden has suggested that three such opportunities, perhaps one in each town, would be manageable and appropriate. Parties interested in facilitating a debate have been asked to contact Holden headquarters at 740-0035.

OBITUARIES

Mary Beth Barnes

Mary Beth (Kearney) Barnes, 42, died Saturday, July 8, in her Cohasset home following an extended illness.

She was born in White Plains, N.Y., and raised in Brockton.

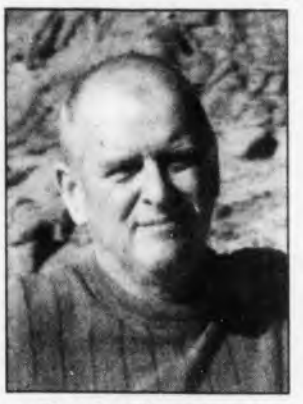
Mrs. Barnes was a graduate of Cardinal Spellman High School, Class of 1975 and Saint Joseph College (Windham, Maine) Class of 1981. For several years, Mrs. Barnes was employed by AT&T. She moved frequently, residing in Hong Kong, Monroe, Conn.; London, England; Omaha, Neb.; and Hingham. For the past 2 years, Mrs. Barnes resided in Cohasset.

She was active in American Women's Social Clubs of Hong Kong and London.

Family members include her husband, Chip Barnes; two sons, Michael and Daniel; one daughter, Maura; her father, James Kearney of East Bridgewater; her mother, Helen (Carney) Kearney of Brockton; two brothers, James Kearney Jr. of Glastonbury, Conn., and Michael of Cohasset; and a sister, Sally Barber of Cohasset.

The funeral was from the McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home, 1 Summer St., Cohasset. A funeral Mass was held in Saint Anthony Church (opposite McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home). Interment was in Woodside Cemetery, Cohasset.

In lieu of flowers, contributions may be made to The Beth Israel-Deaconess Medical Center, (East Campus), 330 Brookline Ave., Boston, Mass. 02215. Attention: Oncology Department.



Clark Chatterton

Clark Chatterton, 58, of Cohasset, died July 6, in South Shore Hospital, Weymouth, following a brief illness.

Mr. Chatterton was born in Cambridge and was a graduate of Cohasset High School, Class of 1957. While there, he was an outstanding athlete. A talented baseball player, Mr. Chatterton joined the New York Mets and was a member of the club prior to returning to Massachusetts to complete his education at Springfield College.

Mr. Chatterton devoted 32 years to Cohasset High School, 24 of those years as athletic director. In addition, he was affiliated with the South Shore Music Circus for 40 years and the Cape Cod Melody Tent (Hyannis) where he was head of concessions.

Mr. Chatterton was awarded Cohasset Citizen of the Year (2000) and was awarded the Athletic Director of the Year (2000) District "C" by the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

Family members include his wife of 37 years, Sallyann (Troy) Chatterton; a son, Troy of Cohasset; a daughter, Kim of Scituate; two granddaughters, Tori and Kelsie, both of Scituate; a sister and brother-in-law, Ann Pompeo and Dr. Roger Pompeo of Cohasset.

A memorial service was held July 10, in the South Shore Music Circus, Cohasset.

Interment was private.

Contributions in Mr. Chatterton's memory may be made to The Second Congregational Church (Organ Fund), 43 Highland Ave., Cohasset, MA 02025.

Arrangements were made by the McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home, 1 Summer St., Cohasset.

Attorney General approves bylaw excluding landfills

Re-zones section of Route 3A

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

The Cohasset Heights Limited landfill now sits in zone that does not permit "landfilling."

That's the effect of a ruling by Attorney General Thomas Reilly which approved an article enacted at the 2000 Annual Town Meeting changing the zoning on a section of Route 3A from light industrial to technology business. All municipal bylaw changes must be approved by the attorney general's office before becoming law.

The new zoning bylaw prevents CHL from re-opening or expanding the existing landfill at the current location on Route 3A. State law prevents cities and towns from excluding landfills from any local industrial zone. The new technology business zone is not an industrial zone, so the town can prohibit landfills in that area.

"CHL has no options left at its current location. It cannot expand, it cannot re-open, and it cannot apply for a new site assignment."
— John K. McNabb Jr., SAFE

"This is very good news," said John K. McNabb Jr., vice president of the anti-landfill group Stop Any Further Expansion (SAFE). "CHL has no options left at its current location. It cannot expand, it cannot re-open, and it cannot apply for a new site assignment. This bylaw saves the town the cost and agony of going through site assignment hearings for an expansion."

CHL owner Paul Barry has been pursuing a plan to expand the existing landfill into an unused area of the facility, Area 5-B. CHL has been

Under-age drinking parties in town yield 23 arrests

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Arrests for under-age drinking over a single weekend in town may have reached an all-time high as police charged 23 – including 22 minors – with alcohol-related crimes in two separate incidents involving house parties.

Police could have made more arrests at a third house party at 388 Beechwood St. but the alleged perpetrators fled the scene as police arrived.

Complaints called into the station prompted the police response to all three incidents, said Police Chief Brian Noonan, who holds parents responsible for their children's behavior.

"I hate to put all the blame on parents," he said. "But if parents are unable to control their children, then police have no choice but to take action."

It all started at about 10 p.m. Friday when police answered complaints about a loud party at 497 Beechwood St. where police discovered a party in progress at which teens were allegedly consuming alcohol. Police confiscated several 30-packs of beer and arrested eight youths. Police will also seek a complaint of keeping a disorderly house against the homeowner Julianna Dean, 42, and William Donovan, 24, a tenant in the home. Sgt. Robert Jackson said Tuesday that police also plan to charge Donovan with procuring alcohol for minors.

"If parents are unable to control their children, then police have no choice but to take action."
— Police Chief Brian Noonan

Then just before midnight, police responded to a call about a loud party near the intersection of King Street and Schofield Road and found a large house party in progress.

Noonan said as officers investigated, they found a house and yard full of intoxicated teens consuming large amounts of alcohol from a keg and 30-packs of beer. Police also witnessed a drinking contest where teens were allegedly encouraging one another to drink by yelling "go! go! go!" Police arrested 14 including the alleged host, Justin McNamara, age 21, 470 King St., who was charged with keeping a disorderly house and procuring alcohol for minors. Police said McNamara admitted buying the alcohol for the party.

A few hours later, police received a "frantic call" from 388 Beechwood St., the Grinnell residence, about another alleged under-age party that was out of control and that a fight was in progress in the front yard and knives were involved, Noonan said. When police officers arrived, they saw youths fleeing from the house and found evidence of a fight at the scene, including blood. Cohasset detectives are investigating further, Noonan said.

Officers from the four-to-midnight shift stayed on duty but even with the extra help, police were stretched administratively and logistically, Sgt. Robert Jackson said.

Police had to use the senior shuttle to transport the arrested teens to the station.

Lesser calls to the dispatch center during the incidents had to wait before an officer could be sent out, police said.

The fact there was no evidence of marijuana or other illegal drugs at the weekend incidents was little consolation to Cohasset police officers, Noonan said. From March through this past weekend, police arrested a

Cohasset closer to ALS ambulance service

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

In some medical emergencies, time is of the essence. And with Cohasset an 18-minute, 12-mile ambulance ride away from the nearest major hospital – South Shore Hospital in Weymouth – the town is interested in improving an accident or heart attack victim's chances.

One way Cohasset is accomplishing this is through the creation of a paramedics department capable of administering Advanced Life Support services. In September of last year, Cohasset had just one paramedic, but that number has now jumped to five, with the possibility if a sixth being added by the end of the summer.

"One of the most important things we've done here is to make one of our priorities the creation of a paramedic department."
— Town Manager Mark Haddad

The town is also one step closer to having its ambulance available for ALS. According to fire department Captain Robert Silvia, regional regulations require a town to staff eight full-time paramedics in order for an ambulance to have ALS designation. But last week, the town was notified in a letter by Stephen Nelson, executive director of Metropolitan Boston Emergency Services Council, Inc., (MBESC) that the council will recommend to the Department of Public Health's Office of Emergency Medical Services the ambulance be allowed to administer ALS during emergencies.

The recommendation came from the guiding council of Region IV that includes Cohasset.

"As a town, we had to go to Region IV and get permission from them to have [the ambulance staffed] with one paramedic and one EMT," said Silvia. He added the waiver contains a clause requiring Cohasset to meet the eight-person requirement within a couple of years. Nelson also included in the waiver the right of the council to review the situation after a year.

Plantings planned for proposed cemetery

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Red maple and American holly trees, which do not have extensive root systems, are just two examples of the vegetation planned to keep the proposed expansion of Woodside Cemetery from being too urban looking.

Also possible is a memorial to Gold Star Mothers — who lost sons or daughters in wartime — that could become a focal point.

Cemetery committee chairman Glenn Pratt showed the zoning board of appeals at a hearing last week the planting plan that was drawn up by a botanist.

Pratt first presented plans to the zoning board of appeals in May that raised concerns about the cemetery as looking "too dense, too cold." The zoning board continued the hearing until July 10 to give Pratt time to present the planting plan and to alleviate the board's concerns about density.

Town meeting will ultimately have the say on whether the project estimated to cost about $600,000 will go forward.

Cemeteries are allowed in all zoning districts by special permit.

Plans are to install upwards of 500 new graves on two acres. There would also be about 530 linear feet of columbarium walls with niches for about 1,000 urns. Vaults for the graves would be installed during construction because the area would be tightly packed with graves. Vaults are placed four feet down and covered with about six inches of topsoil.

Pratt explained that the proposed expansion would be laid out in the same manner as the existing Woodside Cemetery. A key difference, however, is the most gravesites that could be sold together would be two. At Woodside some families initially purchased plots with as many as eight-to-12 graves and then didn't use them all, giving the cemetery a

Selectmen Ronnie McMorris is looking for residents to serve on a task force to examine the increasing amount of air traffic over the area.

"There seems to be a lot more air traffic over the South Shore and we need to take a look at it," she said. Hingham has already created such a task force, and McMorris hopes the two towns can work together on the issue.

The air space over Hingham, Cohasset and Scituate is used as an approach for planes landing at Logan Airport in Boston. Residents interested in serving on the task force should call the selectmen's office at 383-4105.

Volunteers sought for town boards

Selectmen announced a number of vacancies on various town committees.

The boards with a multiple number of vacant seats are the Arts Lottery Council with two vacancies; the Conservation Commission with one member vacancy and two associate vacancies; the Commission on Disabilities with two vacancies and an open seat for a representative of the Committee on Elder Affairs, and the Drug and Alcohol Committee with seats available for two student representatives, a representative from the school committee and the Parent School Organization.

A vacancy also exists on the Historical Commission.

Anyone interested in filling one of these vacancies should contact Town Manager Mark Haddad at 383-4105.

Beach, RTF permits

Your beach and RTF permits are expiring. You will need vehicle registrations, or if not, a Massachusetts registration, proof of residency (tax bill or rental lease). You are encouraged to purchase your sticker through the mail by providing a copy of your registration and a self-addressed return envelope.

Stickers are on sale at the town hall have the following schedule. Monday, Wednesday and Thursday 10 a.m. to 2 p.m.; Tuesday evening 5 to 7 p.m. and Friday 10 a.m. to 1 p.m. Stickers will be on sale at the DPW building Monday-Friday from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. Beach stickers are $7 per vehicle, and $3 per vehicle for elders over 60. RTF stickers are $100 per family, for senior citizens 65 and over will be $65 and for a single resident $50.

Permits now being issued will expire on May 31, 2001.

Farmers Market

The Farmers Market is open from 2:30-6 p.m. Thursdays through Oct.1. Call Julia Peterson at 545-6036 for more information.

Time for walk-ins

Selectmen set aside 10 minutes early in their meetings, usually at 7:40 p.m., to address any concerns from members of the public who have issues that are not on the agenda.

If the matter cannot be handled briefly, it will be placed on a future agenda. Call Town Manager Mark Haddad at 383-4105 for more information. Selectmen's meetings start at 7:30 p.m. and are held on alternate Tuesdays.

The next selectmen's meeting is Tuesday, July 25.

Museum is open for summer season

The Cohasset Historical Society's Maritime Museum on Elm Street at Cohasset Center is opne for its summer season. Its open season runs through September and open hours are Tuesday through Sunday, 1:30 to 4:30 p.m. There is no admission charge and donations are welcomed.

The Maritime Museum, located in the unique 18th-century Ship Chandlery originally of Samuel Bates, houses collections relating to Cohasset's maritime history, mainly from the "Age of Sail" during the 19th century. Included in its exhibits are artifacts from the town's 19th-century fishing fleets, sections devoted to shipwrecks, lifesaving and navigation, also an exhibit showing the history of the first and second Minot's Ledge Lighthouses.

Featured in museum exhibits are a number of ship models showing sailing vessels of the 19th century. The collection of models includes two of Donald McKay's East Boston-built clipper ships and a hull model of an early Cohasset fishing schooner of a type known as a "pinky," dating from the early 1800s.

The museum's second floor holds exhibits of general historical interest, ranging from Native American stone tools to an early cordwainer's desk and tools, housewright's tools, desk and chair from one of Cohasset's first schoolhouses, a display of old maps of the town and numerous other artifacts from Cohasset's early days. The old Chandlery building itself, of post and beam construction, is the only example remaining of the buildings dating from Cohasset's early years as a maritime community, and is largely unaltered.

The Cohasset Historical Society's telephone is (781) 383-1434.

Mass. American relocates office

The Massachusetts-American Water Company, a wholly-owned subsidiary of American Water Works Co., Inc., has relocated its regional offices to a 2,750 square foot first-class office suite in Norwell.

Mass.-American serves residents of North Cohasset.

Representing the utility in the transaction was Aidan Murray, commercial broker for The Grossman Companies, Inc., of Quincy. The owner of the property at 200 Cordwainer Dr., AEP Realty Trust, was represented by Ellison Patten of Peter Elliot & Co.

According to Massachusetts-American Water Company vice president Keith Bossing, the space was chosen for its proximity to Route 3 and easy access to Boston and to several client communities. Tenant amenities include local restaurants, retail stores and hotels. The local office serves 16,000 water customers in Hingham, Hull, North Cohasset, Millbury and Oxford. In all, the parent company last year delivered nearly 260 billion gallons of fresh water to seven million customers across the U.S.

The Grossman Companies, Inc. offers commercial real estate brokerage, consulting, property management and development services. The company owns and manages office, retail and industrial properties in five states.

Other towns weigh in with railroad restoration experiences

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Sometimes forgotten amidst the din of the Greenbush fight — is that the MBTA already restored the two other branches of the Old Colony Railroad to the South Shore. The Plymouth and Middleborough lines started operation in September 1997, and now, according to the MBTA, service more than 13,000 riders per day.

Trains now run through Weymouth, Abington, Whitman, Hanson, Halifax, Plympton, Kingston, Holbrook, Randolph, Avon, Brockton, West Bridgewater, Bridgewater, Lakeville and Middleborough — where passenger service hadn't been seen in more than 40 years.

All those towns have had to deal with MBTA. Cohasset officials have begun to recognize the wealth knowledge these towns may possess when it comes to the restoration process and dealing with the MBTA.

Town Manager Mark Haddad has talked with Kingston, Abington and Hanson officials and said so far the biggest thing he learned is Cohasset has played the game well so far, though the results have been less than desired.

These conversations could provide Cohasset with a cheap education on what to expect in the coming months — as well as hints about making sure the town is sufficiently protected when the trains do start rolling.

John Walsh, a former selectman in Abington, and the board's liaison with the MBTA during negotiations, says that the atmosphere surrounding the negotiations his town had with MBTA seemed much different than what exists in Cohasset.

"Abington as a community, overwhelmingly supported the train and were very anxious to have it happen," he said. "I think it's a major different situation when everyone is pointed toward the same goal...when you start on that basis, like anything in life, communication is easier and results are generally better.

"Enter the lawyers, exit the deal," he said.

The biggest holdup in the Abington process was the location of the train station. The MBTA wanted to use the former train depot, which is now a restaurant, but the town was able to convince the state that a site off Route 123 would handle the traffic better.

"The original site is a historical site, where people used to walk to the station," said Walsh. "There was a lack of parking and we moved it to the area on Route 123 where there was a significant parking area."

However, Abington selectman Paul Donlan said the lot is frequently packed bumper to bumper, adding that the town has asked the state to expand the parking lot, which the MBTA has refused to do thus far.

The state also bought a parcel of land next to a Little League field that helps the field's users avoid having to cross the tracks to park.

Abington's mitigation package from the train seems paltry compared to what Hingham is slated to receive and what Cohasset has asked the MBTA to consider, but Walsh and Donlan said the town is generally happy.

Walsh said mitigation involving houses abutting the tracks was dealt with on an individual basis. He said some houses received "sound-proof" windows, and a portion of track that runs close to a particular row of houses was raised. A sound barrier was also installed on that stretch of track.

Donlan's house is within a stone's throw of the tracks and he said because of the wall, he can't hear a northbound train approaching until it gets almost right on top of him, and then any noise lasts 10-15 seconds and it's gone. "It's a singular track, not one of those old clickity-clack rails...The breaking system is so much different and the engines aren't overly loud," he said. "Sometimes it just feels like a truck going by."

Walsh said, from what he's read, the negotiations have a different atmosphere than Abington's. "It's a whole different atmosphere. Its very confrontational, very adversarial," he said. "I think some of the mitigations are outrageous."

"Guess I wouldn't get elected to anything in the [Greenbush] corridor," he said laughing.

Kingston also received a very basic mitigation package. According to Town Administrator Patricia Wayland, the town received a $300,000 cash to address concerns such as an upgrade in communication equipment and tunnel rescue training, both needed because of the train's use of a tunnel underneath Route 3, "in event of a tunnel accident."

Town residents abutting the tracks, also received mitigation on a house-by-house basis. Wayland said some houses received tree replacement, sound-proof windows, and some sound barriers. One item unique to Kingston, that Haddad thinks should be a "no-brainer" for Cohasset, was retention of a liaison, who would deal directly with the MBTA with any residential complaints.

Wayland said the town's main complaint is a lack of attention to Kingston's growing traffic problem within the town. "One major complaint we've received is about the congestion departing from the commuter rail station," she said. Wayland said the town and MBTA have butted heads about constructing a sidewalk on the main access road and the construction of a second access road. "The MBTA did a survey and did not feel warranted in building a sidewalk," said Wayland. "The MBTA believes we don't need a second access road and the town differs, particularly if the town continues to grow and the MBTA decides to expand service."

Former Bridgewater selectman Jeff Nangle feels his own town made out very well, because of its early involvement in the progress. "We were able to deal with mitigation elements up front, back in 1991 when we first became aware of it," he said. According to Nangle, the town joined with Bridgewater State College, and got involved in the latter-stages of the project's design phase.

The town was able to move a parking area from a residential part of town to the center of town, and able to have each grade-crossing in town looked at. Like the other towns, landowners were dealt with on an individual basis, resulting in the state providing landscaping and sound-proofing for track abutters.

The various town department heads came together and identified all of the areas along the track that might have potential flooding or drainage problems and created a "punch-list" for the state.

"The MBTA put us directly in touch with [project engineers Sverdrup Civil Inc.]," he said. "There were no games being played."

According to Nangle, the biggest design flaw came from outdated numbers being used to base the project upon. He said the population and traffic numbers were from the 80's and "not designed for communities that didn't flourish until the 90's," with Bridgewater being one of those towns. "There is absolutely no way to project the problems that have arisen," he said. Nangle identified congestion in the center of town the biggest problem with the train. Routes 18, 104 and 28 all converge in Bridgewater Center, along with access roads to Bridgewater State College, and now, the commuter rail station. "That is the single best step needed to be addressed."

Brockton received even less in mitigation. Because the city's rails were still being used by freight trains, and no grade crossings exist in the city, the only mitigation received was for a new parking lot across from the downtown station, and small renovations of the city police station, where the downtown station is located. According to City Solicitor Thomas Plouffe, abutting residents had to resolve any sound or vibration issues with the MBTA themselves.

Because the track is elevated throughout a large portion of the city, the MBTA did do some repointing of the six viaducts. However, reconstruction of the city's six bridges were paid for with other state monies.

"One thing that is surprising is that all the towns did the negotiations themselves," said Haddad. "They didn't bring any outside consultants in. Kingston didn't even have a mitigation committee."

Spur in the MBTA's side?

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

A brief stretch of track running from the Hingham border to a spur leading to the former ammunitions dump at what is now Wompatuck State Park, could provide Cohasset with the leverage needed to ensure fair treatment by the MBTA during negotiations.

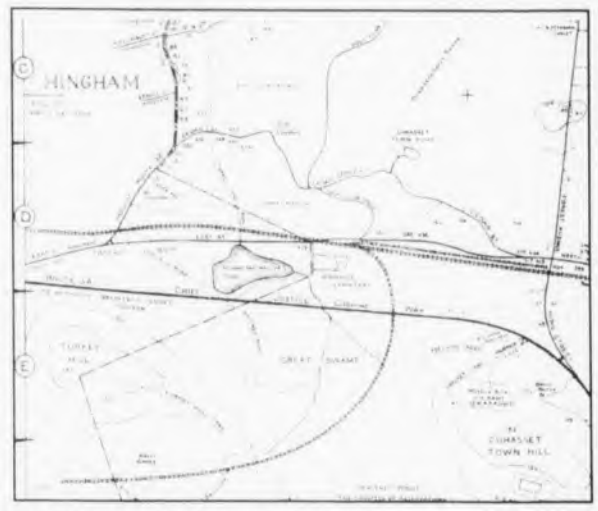
According to Senator Robert Hedlund (R-Weymouth), the brief stretch of track appears to belong to the state's Department of Environmental Management. "For some reason, whenever the ammunition depot got turned over to the DEM, not only did the little spur, but that section of main line came along with that," said Hedlund.

He said the MBTA's plans for Greenbush list that section of track as being owned by DEM.

A representative from the DEM did say the DEM owned a portion of the Cohasset right-of-way, but didn't confirm whether it was this specific stretch of track.

If the DEM indeed does own that portion of track, it would take approval by both branches of the state legislature to release for purchase by the MBTA. According to Hedlund, this will give Cohasset "some leverage unlike anywhere else on the line."

Hedlund said that he had told mitigation committee chairman Thomas Gruber about the spur last year, and reminded him about it recently, after mitigation negotiations with the town broke down. The four-term senator said the bill needed to release the land "is not even on the radar screen" for this legislative session, scheduled to end July 31. "I have parliamentary ability to prevent any land swap of taking of that section of land," said Hedlund. He said the town's leverage would come from his ability to muster the needed 14 votes to defeat the bill.



From the History of Cohasset, Vol. 2 by Burt Pratt.

In May, a Hedlund-sponsored bill in the Senate that would have barred diesel-locomotive service on the Greenbush right-of-way was defeated, but there were 11 votes in favor of the ban. "I would certainly have a much easier time getting one-third vote," said Hedlund. "When you have a local concern, you're going to get sympathy from colleagues. I think we would have a good chance from preventing the legislation from happening, especially with a mandate from Cohasset."

Hedlund said this action wouldn't be obstructionist, rather an example of the town getting tough. "The strategy is just using its as leverage, to see that the communities concerns are met," he said.

At the July 11 selectmen's meeting, the board discussed various strategies in negotiating with the MBTA. One of the strategies mentioned by mitigation committee member Martin Corry was to rezone the right-of-way as recreation land. This would also require a two-thirds approval vote by the legislature to release the land to the MBTA. A similar zoning change was voted upon by town meeting in 1998, but failed to garner the needed two-thirds vote to pass.

Selectmen agreed that leverage is needed while negotiating with the MBTA, after MBTA officials suddenly backed away from the negotiating table in June, taking their initial mitigation offers with them. A subsequent letter to Transportation Secretary Kevin Sullivan, asking for a commitment by the MBTA to negotiate in good-faith has gone unanswered as of press time.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said that the town's assessors office is looking into ownership of that stretch of track. He also said that the town is still looking at all options available to it, including joining with Scituate during the negotiations.

Gruber stated he wanted to get more facts before commenting on the possibility of holding up the land swap.

AROUND TOWN

HELLO EVERYONE!

I would like to start off this week's column by hoping that everyone is enjoying the summer so far. The weather has been wonderful and there are many fun and exciting things to do and see in and around town. Don't forget to check Harvest Moon out every Thursday evening.

HAPPY ANNIVERSARY

Happy anniversary wishes to a wonderful [illegible] to Cole Goff from Brendan and Ryan Goff. [illegible] to celebrate Mom and Dad's [illegible] July 29th. [illegible] Love, Ryan, Brendan and Mom

COLLEGE GRAD

A [illegible] to Miss [illegible] Gregory Patrick Stevens [illegible] USA in Monterey, [illegible] Mr. and Mrs. Richard Stevens of Beach Street. [illegible]

ACADEMIC STANDOUTS

Congratulations to [illegible] Middlebury College in Vermont, John J. Flanagan III and Theodore W. Noon. Both of Cohasset were named College Scholars of Excellence during the 2000 graduation. Only [illegible] a grade point average in the [illegible] full course load and earn no grades lower than a B. John is the son of John Jr. and Deborah Flanagan of Cohasset and Theodore is the son of Nicholas and Constance Corvan Noon also of Cohasset. Congratulations to both of you, this is a fantastic achievement.

DEAN'S LIST

Also from Middlebury College, Sydney H. Johnston, daughter of Robert and Diane Griswold Johnston was named to the Dean's List during the 2000 spring term. She had to carry a full course load as well, achieve a grade point average of 3.5 or higher and receive no grade lower than a B. Good work, Sydney!

Providence College had some great news to report from Cohasset as well. Brian Riley, class of 2000, Patrick Leahy, class of 2002 and Andrea Freeman, class of 2001, were all named to the Deans List for the spring 2000 semester. Brian's major is History and both Patrick and Andrea are majoring in Management. Excellent work to all three of you!

ANOTHER GRAD

Connecticut College had a Cohasset graduate as well. Brooke Conlin Lombardy was awarded a B.A. in Sociology based Human Relations in a commencement ceremony held on May 27. Good job, Brooke!

ACADEMIC HONORS

The last school to send some great news this week is the Noble and Greenbough school in Dedham. John Edward Lubitz, a junior and Kristen Evans O'Connell, a senior, both received academic honors in the Distinction level for their second semester grades. Lindsay Erica Taniguchi Deane, a grade 8 student and Joseph M. Palone, received academic honors at the High Distinction level for their second semester grades. Wow, this is wonderful news for the four of you. You all worked very hard.

TALL SHIPS

I am hoping that everyone was able to get a glimpse of the Tall Ships while they were here. What a beautiful and magnificent sight for us all to see!

BIRTHDAY WISHES

I have a few Birthday wishes to send out. Happy Birthday to Jeannie Bailey, July 22, Peggy Litchfield, July 24 and Brandon Winn who turned 4 last week. Hope you all have wonderful days.

That is all there is this week, please remember to send any and all news to me at jenpiep@yahoo.com or 622 CJC Highway in Cohasset. Hope everyone has a wonderful upcoming week!

Irene Buck, Eric Oddleifson of Cohasset, and Richard King, chairman of the Mass. Alliance for Arts Education, at the association's annual awards ceremony last month.

Cohasset man honored by art education alliance

The importance of the arts to the lives of students and to the Commonwealth dominated ceremonies as the Massachusetts Alliance for Arts Education conferred 11 awards on teachers, leaders and members of the community. Key recognition in MAAE's 15th annual celebration went to Joyce Kulhawik of WBZ-TV, State Senator Susan Fargo, and Eric Oddleifson of Cohasset. The ceremonies occurred at the Statehouse June 8.

MAAE gave its prestigious Irene Buck Service to Arts Education Award to Oddleifson. Oddleifson formed the Center for Arts in Basic Curriculum in 1989 to engage research and advocacy in support of education through the arts, and he has provided important support over the years to MAAE.

On receiving the award from Irene Buck, he admonished arts education advocates to be concerned with the broader issues of school reform in the state.

"In particular, we must provide parents with qualitative measures of individual student and school performance, including school portraits to add depth and relevance to the narrowly constructed MCAS test scores."

— Eric Oddleifson

"In particular, we must provide parents with qualitative measures of individual student and school performance, including school portraits to add depth and relevance to the narrowly constructed MCAS test scores," Oddleifson said. He pointed to the newly formed National Arts and Learning Foundation in Walnut Hill as the successor to CABC, to encourage and support the role of the arts in providing qualitative measures.

Oddleifson, a graduate of Harvard College and the Harvard Business School, has been professionally engaged in farm and timber investing since 1975. He began his business career as an Arthur D. Little Inc. consultant. He co-founded Resource Investments, Inc., a timber investment management organization, in 1982. Cohasset calling card features familiar scene

Phone company to share revenue with schools

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

When Andrew Bell, 8, moved to Rustic Drive from Quincy six months ago, he was inspired by the small house off Jerusalem Road on Black Rock.

So he painted the scene and entered it in "Picture Your Cohasset Pride Contest" sponsored by Eastern Telephone.

Andrew's acrylic painting on paper was selected from more than 60 others submitted by Cohasset elementary school pupils for the contest held at the Festival on the Common last month.

The Osgood student's design will appear on the new Eastern Telephone Cohasset calling card unveiled last Friday at a special ceremony at the middle-high school.

It's all part of a promotion by the Boston-based communications company that will donate 4 percent of its monthly service and usage charges in Cohasset to the Cohasset Public Schools.

School committee chairman Pat Martin said as much as $4,000-$7,000 could come in the first year depending on how many households opt for the Eastern Telephone service.

"The money would go to the alternative funding committee to supplement the budget," she said.

Last September, officials from Eastern Telephone presented the revenue sharing plan to the school committee. The company does all the publicity for the program.

The company, which offers Bell Atlantic service at a lower cost, began to offer service in Cohasset earlier this year. Congress voted in 1996 to introduce competition into the local telephone market, making it possible for companies like Eastern to purchase Bell Atlantic service at a wholesale rate and resell it to customers at a discount.

"The lines are the same and the phone number doesn't change," said Paula McLaughlin, regional manager.

Other towns using the service include Sharon, Stoughton, Braintree and Dedham.

Martin said it's a great way to raise money.

"It's not labor intensive and it gives people the opportunity to raise funds and acquire a needed service at the same time," she said.

Andrew won first place in the contest at the festival by passers by who voted for their favorite design. Runners up included: first-grader Logan Pratt (second place); fifth-grader Colleen Richardson (third place); and fifth-grader Hunter Sease (contestant winner).

The winners received prizes donated by local retailers Over the Moon in Hingham and Good Sport, Inc. in Cohasset. All contestants received a coupon for a free ice cream from Newport Creamery on Rte. 3A.

OPINION

EDITORIAL

A wake-up call

Cohasset doesn't have a lot to be proud of recently regarding the behavior of a portion of its younger population.

Police have made about 40 — count them — 40 arrests for underage drinking since March.

This weekend, the sad situation got even worse when Cohasset police responded to complaints about three separate parties that all involved minors drinking.

Even more arrests would have been possible had some not fled the scenes. To cope with the numbers police commandeered the senior shuttle to take the young people to the station.

Some of you might laugh at the thought of that sight. Others might think it's ironic that a vehicle used to take some of our most precious citizens during the day out on shopping trips and to medical appointments had to be used at night to transport another precious cargo, our children, albeit in negative circumstances.

Under-age drinking is no laughing matter and mixing alcohol with teenagers is a recipe for disaster.

We pray it doesn't take a tragedy to wake up some Cohasset parents who must have a cavalier attitude about all of this — one that is shared by their children who, when arrested, often display arrogant and rude behavior toward the police.

In fact, according to police, the most concern some parents could muster when called to the station to bail their son or daughter was the fact their child was arrested when others weren't.

There is just no excuse for all this. Under-age drinking is illegal because it's dangerous for young people. It's as simple as that.

At one party a fight broke out and knives were allegedly brandished. We're not surprised. Pour a little beer in a 17- or 18-year-old body and anything can happen.

So where do we go from here? The schools, police and drug and alcohol committee are all working to educate children and make families aware of the dangers of under-age drinking. But their efforts are all for naught without a key element — parental supervision.

We wonder if the parents of the Cohasset teens at those parties knew where their kids were Saturday night.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Difficult mandate

To the Editor:

We read with dismay the letter in last week's paper which referred to the town's Greenbush Mitigation Committee as "obstructionist." That committee has been given the difficult mandate of trying to make sure that our community does not get steamrollered by the MBTA. Unfortunately, the committee members have discovered what everyone else who has dealt with the T already knows: these people are a bunch of snake-in-the-grass bureaucrats who have no inhibitions about lying in order to put another purple line on the map.

Most towns don't find out how nefarious the T is until it is too late. Fortunately, the delay in the Greenbush construction process has enabled South Shore residents to realize that the T never will come to the bargaining table in good faith except at the end of a barrel of a gun, i.e., a lawsuit or some other means which prevents them from running roughshod over the people they supposedly serve.

I was one of the slim majority who voted in favor of the train a few years ago in the town-wide referendum. As a newcomer to the town, I thought that the train would be a nice boost for my new home's real estate value. But since then, we all have learned (except perhaps for the people who signed last week's letter) that the T's 110 decibel horns will blare from one end of town to the other; that the T has no plans to provide at least one, non-grade crossing in Cohasset; that the diesel particulate emissions from the trains are far more harmful to our lungs than the automobile pollution it will replace; that those diesel fumes will be equal to the pollution of all of the cars taken off the road, but in our backyards; and that the T inevitably will increase our assessment dramatically to pay for this $408 million financial boondoggle, which will have the effect of either raising our taxes or cutting our other town services, which already are too high and at barebones levels, respectively.

In addition, in the past few years I've discovered the convenience of the commuter boat as a means of getting into Boston — but wonder why the T, for a fraction of the cost of Greenbush, doesn't turn the commuter boat into a first-class operation with a bigger schedule.

As for property values, the most recent statistics have shown that we have outpaced every other town in the region in terms of percentage increase, even greater than any of the towns to our west which have new train service (and we started at a higher basis). Moreover, even if Greenbush does increase our real estate values, at what cost to the quality of life in our town will that come? High real estate values are nice when you want to sell your house, but if you plan on staying awhile and raising your family here, the trade-off of the train's negatives far outweighs the positives.

Finally, two more ideas for our mitigation committee and selectmen. First, the T should pay for soundproofing at the library. We're going to spend millions for a new library, but the train tracks are just a few feet away and the nearby grade crossing will result in a horn blasting 26 times throughout the day — not exactly a peaceful location for a library (or anything else).

Second, the town should insist upon a non-grade crossing, either by means of a tunnel or an overpass, preferably at Sohier Street. When the gates invariably will go down thanks to a malfunction or a power outage, there will be no way for any of us, including emergency vehicles and school buses, to get to the other side of town. In every other community in which I've lived with a train, there was at least one non-grade crossing where you could go if the gates stayed down and traffic backed up. But we'll be stuck driving all the way down Jerusalem Road and then up through Five Corners to get to 3A.

So yes, we do need leverage to fight the T — and to that end the selectmen should call a Special Town Meeting forthwith for rezoning the right of way as recreational land. It should be clear to everyone that unless we do this, the T has no intention of treating us fairly.

Those who support the train, apparently regardless of the environmental, aesthetic, safety, or monetary costs to our community, view its resurrection with the proverbial rose-colored glasses when they look back at its past — and with blinders on when they look at its future.

Andrew and Claudia Quigley
38 Jerusalem Rd.

Train mitigation

To The Editor:

This letter is in response to the letter in last week's Cohasset Mariner from residents commenting on our mitigation efforts regarding the MBTA's Greenbush project. I whole heartedly support any resident's right to provide input and comments. However, in this case, the comments do not always align themselves with the facts.

First, let me say that our mitigation goal is the same today as it was two and a half years ago when I became chairman. That is, to assume the train is coming and work to get the best mitigation package for our town. Mitigation is the sum of those things which attempt to overcome the negative impacts of the train on affected property owners and residents. As much as specific citizens do want or don't want the train to come, if it does come, clearly it will impact parts of our Town. Our mission is to be neither pro nor con with regard to the train.

The negotiations with the MBTA and the laws, procedures and technologies that we must understand to do our job on behalf of our citizens are very involved and complex. As a group of volunteers we do our absolute best to properly represent our town in the way our Selectmen direct us. We believe we have done a decent job in this task … not perfect, but decent. And, we always welcome citizen input at our meetings.

The referenced "wish list" of 26 items for Cohasset was taken directly from the MBTA's own Tracking Document which listed all open items that had been discussed between the MBTA and the Town since the start of the mitigation process. The Mitigation Committee met and carefully reviewed each of those original items from the MBTA's list and reduced the list from approximately 50 items to the 26 most important items. These are not new items. They represent concerns regarding impacts that the MBTA's plans would have on parking, traffic flow, Town flooding, Town safety and specific residents and businesses. We previously had made it clear to the MBTA that we would not accept an early mitigation settlement, whatever its makeup, before all of the identified issues were addressed. To do otherwise would not be fair to our residents. We were in discussion of these remaining items with the MBTA when the MBTA changed their mind and pulled the whole offer off the table, from not only Cohasset, but all towns, except for Hingham where they already had a signed agreement. Clearly, the MBTA's actions were not aimed solely at Cohasset. That's where we are right now. No discussion, no meetings, no further general mitigation process with the MBTA.

This does not mean we have not made any progress. Many mitigation items have been identified, negotiated, reviewed and documented. The following are a small sampling of these: At our request, detailed actual noise tests were performed at ABB Optical and the South Shore Art Center to assure their respective operations will not be adversely affected by the passing trains. We had the MBTA conduct detailed vibration testing at ABB Optical which showed that the train vibration would adversely affect their precision lens grinding operation. The MBTA has agreed to provide special vibration mitigation at their critical machinery, which will enable ABB Optical to keep their business viable. As a result of participation in the Federal Section 106 Historic Preservation Proceedings, which offers superior mitigation for historic areas and structures, we have obtained multiple mitigation benefits. One of these benefits is visual screening between the tracks and specific historic properties as well as changes in fencing so that it blends better with our village setting. Without our active participation in Section 106, mitigation items such as these would not have been provided. The Section 106 Proceedings are continuing, since they are required under federal law.

We continue to work hard to support our Town. And, anyone is welcome to attend our mitigation meetings and provide input on general or specific issues. In fact, we welcome it.

Tom Gruber
Chairman,
Cohasset Greenbush Mitigation Committee

Bradley, Holden point out differences

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

On the surface — the two Democratic candidates vying to represent Hingham, Cohasset and Hull — seem similar.

Both Garrett Bradley and Mike Holden are young, white males, with young families. Both are lawyers that live in Hingham. And both men believe in being a community-oriented state representative.

A recent candidates' forum sponsored by the South Shore Children's Champion Network didn't do much to distinguish the two candidates. The event, held at the Blue Hills Happy Family building on Crow Point Lane in Hingham, was an opportunity for the candidates to expound their views on a variety of different children and family issues.

Bradley, a member of the SSCCN, was the first candidate questioned and gave his position on issues such as lead paint removal (it should be mandatory, like septic systems requirements under Title V), low-income housing ("Should be focusing on it," though not much developable land in the area), health care (favors a slow upgrade until everyone is covered; concerned about covering everyone in "one fell swoop"), and foster care (a cap to the amount of children in a foster home at one time, unless its a family unit).

When it was Holden's turn, his responses to questions thrown at him were similar to Bradley's, even though Holden was held up at another commitment and came to the forum late. Holden, like Bradley, does not favor the legislature changing the special education requirements, and does favor using charter schools to take away public schools monopoly in education.

Paulette Cobin, an organizer of the event, said the forum was educational for her and the SSCCN. "We learned more about them," she said. Cobin said the group had an idea of where Bradley stood on a lot of the issues near and dear to the SSCCN, because of Bradley's involvement with the group, but also said that they were able to find out more about Holden.

"Mike gave us a general sense [of where he stands]," she said. "I don't think we have much convincing to do."

Despite the perceived similarities, both candidates think that once voters look beyond the outer package, their differences will stand out.

"If people look beyond the surface, the fact that we're two young, male Democrats, I think they will see some differences important when deciding who best represents their interests on Beacon Hill," said Holden.

"People ask me about that," said Bradley about the similarity question. "They may or may not know about the other candidate, and want to hear why I'm running and why I think I make the best candidate."

Mike Holden

Garrett Bradley

For Bradley, the difference comes down to his broad range of community experience. He cites his experience volunteering and fundraising for Wellspring Multi-Service House in Hull, coaching youth football since 1993, leading the juvenile prosecution team in Hingham District Court, and his time spent on Hingham's playground and capital outlay committees, as giving him the knowledge needed to represent the citizens of the district. "It comes down to experience and who has the most," said Bradley, who ran unsuccessfully against incumbent Republican Mary Jeanette Murray in 1998. "The reason why I think I am the better candidate is that I've been given the opportunity to meet so many different people.

"It's not about political experience, it's about community experience, and I feel I really know the district and issues."

For Holden, he thinks his appeal should come from his time in public office, and his tradition of speaking-out on unpopular issues. "I have eight years of experience going from affordable housing, to more mainstream issues addressed each year, including the town budget," said Holden, who served on the Board of Health and was a selectman in Hingham from 1997 to this year. "I've spoken on controversial issues beginning in 1993 when I got on the floor at town meeting and advocated an article studying the use of a portion of what is now town hall for senior living. Obviously it failed, but the point is, I got up and advocated a position, despite it being unpopular."

Holden also lobbied for the $39 million override that funded the renovation of South Elementary School and Hingham High School.

"My opponents [Bradley, Republican Mary Anne McKenna, also of Hingham, and unenrolled candidate Walter Murray of Hull] have never spoken at town meeting and have never taken a position on a controversial issue," he said.

"There are some folks who ask how I distinguish myself from my opponent, and I feel I do in any number of ways, from my government experience, to my willingness to advocate a position," Holden said. "I've got some significant experience on issues dramatically impacting the region. I think folks will be very mindful of that when they choose their next advocate in the State House."

Holden and Bradley will face off in the Democratic primary Sept. 19. The winner will challenge McKenna, a republican, and Walter Murray, who is unenrolled, in the Nov. 7 election.

Information regarding candidate debates and forums, will be posted in the coming weeks on the Cohasset Mariner's and Hingham Journal's websites. For the Cohasset Mariner, log on to www.townonline.com/south/cohasset For the Hingham Journal, log on to www.hinghamjournal.com

McKenna attends chamber breakfast

Mary Anne McKenna

Mary Anne McKenna, candidate for state representative for Hingham, Hull and Cohasset, attended the South Shore Chamber of Commerce monthly breakfast held this past Tuesday at Lombardo's in Randolph. The event, which featured Lieutenant Governor Jane Swift as guest speaker, was attended by more than 200 people.

"It was a pleasure meeting so many of the local business owners, all of whom are concerned about economic development as well as the quality of life on the South Shore," McKenna said. "The men and women of the Chamber have a vested interest in this district and work tirelessly to support causes which will enhance our community character, as well as guide us toward economic prosperity. The South Shore Chamber of Commerce is a credit to our towns, and we need to collectively show our support for their efforts."

Holden on SPED

In a letter to Senate President Thomas Birmingham, candidate for state representative Mike Holden expressed his concern with the Legislature's recent action. Massachusetts school districts were previously required to provide the "maximum feasible benefit" for their special-needs students. The legislature voted this week to adopt a standard requiring schools to provide a "free and appropriate education."

Holden criticized the state's record on special education.

"While the Commonwealth held itself out as having a higher standard, it was never willing to fund it. School districts have had a very difficult time meeting significant operational and capital demands with grossly inadequate assistance from the Commonwealth for special education. The lack of funding has significantly impaired the ability of schools to plan and to provide the best services they can. While the Commonwealth has boasted a higher standard, the reality has been the higher standard was only in words, not in deeds. The needs of disabled students were met by cities and towns relying largely on residential tax revenues."

Holden said the impact on special needs students is unclear, explaining that uncertainty will only exacerbate problems local schools have in planning, budgeting and providing services. He asked Birmingham to ensure local school districts are sufficiently funded and to "hold the Commonwealth to a true commitment to its most vulnerable."

Bradley fundraiser

Former Plymouth County Prosecutor and current Democratic Candidate for State Representative Garrett Bradley will hold a fundraiser on Thursday, July 27 from 6 -8 p.m. to celebrate his 30th birthday. The event will be held at Siro's on Main Street, 1217 Main St. in Hingham. In honor of Bradley's 30th birthday, which was July 4th, tickets will be sold for $30.

Persons interested in attending the event can call, campaign manager, Michael Salerno at the Bradley headquarters at 740-7272.

Fisherman next on celebrity reader list

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

The celebrity summer reading series at the Paul Pratt Library continues on July 25, with a special reading by teacher and part-time fisherman Pete Flaherty.

"It's fun, I deal with kids all the time," said Flaherty, who captains a fishing boat out of Cohasset during the summer.

Flaherty says he reads "an awful lot" and has since he was 11. "I read a lot of World War II stuff…that's what started it," he said. His current book collection features a number of history and mystery books and counts Robert Ludlum as one of his favorite authors.

Flaherty, 57, is the father of three, and though his children are all too old to be read to, he used to read to them frequently. In fact, one of the selections Flaherty hopes to read next week is one he read to his kids called, "I'll Always Love You."

"We wanted people who represented Cohasset," said children's librarian Suzanne Terry of her decision to include Flaherty in the celebrity reading series. Fire chief Roger Lincoln and Dr. Steven Golden already participated in the program. "Fishing is one of the great things about living in Cohasset and kids like fishing.," she said.

Some of the books Terry hopes Flaherty will read include, "Loud Mouth George & the Fishing Trip" by Nancy Carlson, and "The Fisherman & His Wife" by Rosemary Wells. Terry also said the library will give out some "fishy" prizes to those in attendance.

A middle-school teacher in Norwell, Flaherty says he reads to his sixth- and seventh-grade students. "They love to be read to."

The reading will start at 7 p.m. and is expected to last 45 minutes. Police Chief Brian Noonan is the next celebrity guest and is scheduled to read on August 8.

Calling all Harry Potter fans to discuss how they view the Harry Potter books in a library book group that will start up in the fall ... For more information, call Suzanne Terry, children's librarian, at 383-1348.

Summer storytelling

The next celebrity guest reader, fisherman Pete Flaherty of Cohasset, will entertain children and their families at Paul Pratt Memorial Library Tuesday, July 25, at 7 p.m. This is the third in the series of Cohasset celebrity storytellers. Flaherty will be followed by the final celebrity, Police Chief Brian Noonan, Tuesday, Aug. 8.

This is a great time to bring your kids in to meet our local celebrities and the program is free and open to all Cohasset residents. It is in conjunction with the statewide reading program funded by the Massachusetts Regional Library Systems.

For more information, call Suzanne Terry at 383-1348.

Reading program

It's not too late to participate in the summer reading program at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library. Children can still turn in their reading logs for prizes like a deep sea creature key chain, a frisbee embossed with the "Open Books, Open Frontiers" logo, and soon to be available 3-D rainbow glasses and rocket key chains.

Suzanne Terry, children's librarian, announces a guest story teller and artist, Michael Astley, who will read an original story and illustrate it as he tells his story Thursday, Aug. 17, at 1 p.m. This will be followed by a "Make Your Own Sundae" party for all those children who have participated in the summer reading program.

Victory for Cohasset schools in FY'01 budget

Sen. Robert L. Hedlund said that the Senate's education funding proposal was incorporated into the final budget package that the legislature passed July 18 allowing an increase in Cohasset's Chapter 70 monies of 16.5 percent above the FY 2000 budget to a total of $1,327,934.

"This education funding package is in keeping with the spirit of education reform and is a significant victory for Cohasset school children. The Conference Committee was wise to incorporate the Senate's comprehensive school funding scenario in the budget," Hedlund said.

The package the Legislature approved also proposes that the School Building Assistance Program be written into the general laws to increase the stability and predictability of state support for school construction. Major renovation projects will also now be eligible to participate in the SBAB program. Current regulations favor "new construction" over renovation projects in the reimbursement formula. The new reimbursement formula has been designed to accurately and fairly reflect community resources. Allowances will be made for property wealth, per capita income, and level of poverty.

The budget will now go to Gov. Paul Cellucci's desk for his approval and signature.

Slavery, a curse that never dies

Slavery has been dead in America for lo! these many years — except, of course, in certain newspaper offices of my acquaintance, but that's another story.

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

However, there appears to be quite a few people in the year 2000 who are unwilling to let it sink quietly into the mud of history along with concentration camps and the Inquisition.

The latest recollection of slavery, which ended by constitutional amendment more than 130 years ago, came from Darnell Williams, head of the NCAAP in Springfield.

Williams told the Globe that he had no intention of viewing the Tall Ships in Boston Harbor last week because "these ships drum up negative images of how our people arrived in this country."

At the same time, the Hartford Courant, the nation's oldest continually published newspaper, was apologizing for accepting advertising for the sale of slaves and for the capture of runaways from 1764 to 1823.

There it is. The key words. Reparations. Restitution. It's enough to scare the bejesus out of even the most fervent apologists among us.

"We . . . apologize for any involvement by our predecessors at the Courant in the terrible practice of buying and selling human beings," said the paper's spokesman Ken DeLisa.

Maybe someday, the Courant will have to find space to apologize to People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals (PETA) for advertising a sale on steaks down at the Stop & Shop.

The Courant's apology came on the heels of a similar apology by the Aetna Insurance Co. for selling insurance policies on slaves to slaveowners 150 years ago.

And officials of the African country of Benin, which was known as Dahomey when it was a leading supplier of slaves, also apologized for their country's role in selling their fellow Africans to white slave traders.

"We cry for forgiveness and reconciliation," said Luc Gnacadja, Benin's minister of environment and housing, who is on a tour of the United States to publicize the apology.

Congressman Tony Hall of Ohio, who is white, incidentally, is leading the charge to have Congress formally apologize to African-Americans "for the wrongs committed against their ancestors who suffered as slaves."

"I believe the apology is only the first step," said Hall. "Personally, I believe there ought to be some kind of reparation, some kind of restitution."

There it is. The key words. Reparations. Restitution. It's enough to scare the bejesus out of even the most fervent apologists among us.

Let's see now, 225 years of servitude for several million unpaid workers at the minimum wage of $6.50 an hour is . . . well, let's just say it's a lot of money, enough to make the Big Dig look like a penny ante poker game.

Two hundred-year-old records unearthed the other day in Washington indicate that at least 400 slaves worked on construction of the Capitol itself between 1792 and 1800 for $5 a month each — paid to their owners.

Congressman John Conyers of Michigan, who is black, would like to see a commission created to study proposals for reparations.

"Is this something that we just erase from our memory because it happened a while back and there are no living former slaves at this point?" he asked.

"Is there a statute of limitations on an injustice that is this huge?"

New RTF ruling

TO THE EDITOR:

Thank goodness the Cohasset selectmen have again tried to protect our community and its children from their irresponsible parents by enacting the "No under 12 running around the transfer station" rule.

Heck, it's just one point in my argument with my wife that all children should be placed back in the womb upon leaving the house. Maybe now she'll see the light. And besides, I've been quite miffed since a little miscreant, most likely under 12, beat me to a beautiful CD player at the Boutique, probably dropped off by some Precinct-1 resident shortly after its warranty expired.

Regulations show care. Care shows good government. Government is good.

Star of the Week

Nick Bolster, pitcher for the Cohasset Legion team, threw a complete game shutout against league champions Weymouth last week, propelling his team into the playoffs. Although the Post 118 squad was eliminated from post-season play by Milton this week, Bolster's showing can not be diminished.

Legion team completes outstanding season

Post 118 club bows out of playoffs after great qualifying run

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

After winning the last two games of the season with their backs to the wall, the Cohasset-Scituate Legion Baseball squad earned their first ever berth in the playoffs.

Weymouth, the top team in the league, defeated Cohasset-Scituate last Thursday, leaving them on the brink of elimination. Needing to beat Milton, the sixth place finisher in the league, as well as Weymouth to get in, Cohasset-Scituate came forward with two outstanding performances.

Tom Fitzgerald hurled a complete game in the 6-4 victory over Milton (11-9).

Against Weymouth, every player on the team stepped up for to hand the top seeded team a 7-0 thrashing. Cohasset's Nick Bolster was outstanding on the mound, going the distance for the shutout.

"[Bolster] pitched very well," said Coach Scott Arnold. "After we lost to Weymouth, and our record went to 10-8, we were in a must win situation."

Representing the number four seed in the East Division, Cohasset-Scituate was defeated by the West Division's number two seed, Norwood in two straight games to win the best of three series and end C-S's season.

"People really stepped up, even when they were playing out of position. We just battled everyday. And that's what [the season] was: a battle." "They were awesome kids. we are very proud of our accomplishments."-

Coach ScottArnold.

In the first game, Scituate's Jessie Cole threw a complete game, but was tagged with the loss, 4-2.

"Jessie Cole pitched a great game, he just did not get enough offense," said Coach Arnold.

In the second game, the 8-3 score did not reflect the close competition of the game.

Greg O'Keeffe of Cohasset, who Arnold has dubbed his "number one starter," allowed two earned runs through five innings. Showing the fatigue of a long, hard-nosed season, however, O'Keeffe walked the bases loaded in the top of the sixth before being replaced by Bolster.

Bolster, pitching on only a few days rest, then gave up a grand slam.

The other teams from the East Division in the playoffs were Weymouth, Morisette, Braintree and West Roxbury.

Though Cohasset-Scituate would have enjoyed advancing past the first round, it can hardly be considered a disappointment.

"They were awesome kids," said Arnold. "We are very proud of our accomplishments."

Quite possibly, the most impressive aspect of the season for this team was their ability to continue playing through imperfect conditions. During the first few weeks of the season, players were playing out of position, and many of the players from BC High could not yet join the team.

"People really stepped up, even when they were playing out of position," said Arnold. "We just battled everyday. And that's what [the season] was: a battle."

10-Year Old All-Stars on a roll

Snowdale Does a "Pedro Martinez" Impression On Canton

The Cohasset 10 Year Old East team went into Canton Tuesday evening, July 12th, needing a victory. At 7:30 the lights went on and the umpire yelled, "Play Ball!"

The bugs were not the only things biting the Canton All Stars that night. Cohasset's

David Snowdale pitched 4 perfect innings. Yes many pitchers have thrown shut outs for 4 innings, but how many can claim a feat like young Snowdale? All David did was to face the minimum number of batters (12) for four innings and ,of those 12 Canton hitters, he struck out all but one of them.

When "Snowy" wasn't mowing down the opposition from the mound, he was also having a pretty impressive night offensively, collecting three solid hits.

Of course, David had a little help from his friends, as the 10 Year Old East All Stars walloped Canton 19 – 0. Justin Hollis and Cody Morgan both just barely missed clearing the fence with home runs.

There was plenty of offense to go around, though, as multiple hit games were also submitted by Tommy Chase, Sam DeGiacomo, Pat Doonan, Mike Grimm Will Pinkus and Chris Rose.

The 10 Year Old East Squad continued their "Power Surge" two nights later when they hosted the Weymouth All Stars, with a 26-6 victory. Tommy Chase provided plenty of excitement with a home run into the pine trees at the Beechwood Field.

The "Three Amigos" combination of Chris Mills, Cliff Musto and Brian Hill all turned in top performances on both sides of the diamond.

Bay state games get underway

The 19th Annual Bay State Games kicked off last Thursday in Boston and will run through this Sunday, July 23rd. There are competitions in 24 different sports taking place in the greater Boston and greater Worcester areas, with over 10,000 Massachusetts athletes of all ages participating in this Olympic-style, including 15 of Cohasset's own.

SPORTS NOTES

Lacrosse registration-

The Cohasset Recreation Department is now accepting registrations for a full-contact boys' rules lacrosse clinic the week of July 24-28. The clinic will be for grades 3-4 from 7:30 to 8:30 a.m. and grades 5-8 from 8:30 to 10 a.m. at Milliken Field. The fee per participant is $42 for grades 3-4 and $62 for grades 5-8, and checks can be made payable to the Town of Cohasset.

Chuck Jaffee will direct this unique opportunity to learn and develop the basic skills and concepts of lacrosse.

Registration forms can be obtained at the recreation office, first floor, Cohasset Town Hall.

Registration for youth football and cheerleading

Registration forms for the fall 2000 Scituate/Cohasset youth football and cheerleading season may be printed off of the web site www.scicohfootball.com.

Football questions and registration forms are also available from Joe Obert at (781) 545-0854.

Cheerleading questions and registration forms are also available from Kathy Judge at (781) 545-3745.

The minimum age is 8 years old by Dec. 31, 2000; maximum age is no older than 14 in 2000.

Cohasset Youth Soccer raffle

The Cohasset Youth Soccer League is sponsoring a raffle to raise funds for the fall 2000 and Spring 2001 town soccer programs. The club is raffling a classic 1966 Ford Mustang Convertible. Tickets are $5.00 each or 3 for $10.00.

Winners will be announced on Tuesday, September 5, 2000, outside Cohasset Town Hall on Highland Street. The winner need not be present to win. Maximum number of tickets available for sale is eight thousand (8,000).

To request tickets, get facts about the car and see a color photograph, visit www.mustangraffle.cjb.net. Or call 781-383-7017. You must be 18 years of age to participate.

Cohasset Soccer Club

The Cohasset Soccer Club will have a middle school team for the girls and the boys. These teams will consist of players who do not make the tryout-based school team or choose to play for the club team for other reasons (for example they might not be able to make the required school practices due to other commitments).

The soccer club will hire a professional coach who will have three to four practices during the week and play a Saturday game in the Cranberry League. There may also be a mid-week game against some of the local private school teams. There are no playoffs in the Cranberry League.

No registration for this team until the first or second week of school and the middle school teams have made their selections. The cost of the program will be $125 for the fall season (eight weeks). It is more costly than our other programs because of the paid coach. The schools "users fee" for the middle school team is less but is also taxpayer subsidized.

For more information, call Wallace St. John, 383-2552.

Annual 'Learn to Row' to Peddocks Island

The annual "Learn to Row" to Peddocks Island will be Wednesday, Aug. 2, from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. The cost is $15 for members; $20 for non-members.

Meet at the museum's Windmill Point Boathouse (across the street from Hull High School), and join a crew learning to row the museum's premier boats, Boston pilot gigs, to one of the harbor's most beautiful islands. The group will explore the scenic roads and turn-of-the-century buildings of Fort Andrew, observe birds in a secluded sanctuary, beach comb, laze in the sunshine, swim, or form a small group of painters and bring home personal souvenirs. To cap it off, the museum provides a picnic for all (drinks and snacks not included). This is always a special day for newcomers and old-hands alike. Reservations are required

Cohasset swimmers remain unbeaten

Team blows Duxbury and Hanover squads out of the water

Submitted by Eileen McBride

It was a busy and rewarding week for the Cohasset Swim Team.

After a tremendous winning start to the season, Cohasset swimmers were back in Duxbury again for a July 12th meet, and once more they brought home a substantial win, this time against Duxbury Yacht Club.

The meet kicked off with the 8 and under boys narrowly missing a win, but taking second, third and fourth places in the 100 yards medley relay (2nd: Buckley, Campbell, Durkin, Durkin; 3rd: Lynner, Shipp, Yeager, MacCormack; 4th: Queenan, Porter, Doonan, Carrier). The 8 and under girls built on this solid start claiming first, second and third positions and bringing Cohasset's score in line with Duxbury's (1st: Sullivan, Teague, Lehr, Zappolo; 2nd: Mahoney, Donahue, Musto, Libby; 3rd: Fontaine, Kelly, Dickinson, Jennings).

With the score momentarily balanced, the 10 and under boys lost some ground, again, missing a win but claiming second, third and fifth places (2nd: Poh, Hunt, Cunningham, Doonan; 3rd: Shipp, Musto, Muir, Ulmer; 5th: Hurley, Kelley, Yeager, Sceery). The 10 and under girls soon redressed the balance, however, securing first, second and fourth positions (1st: Meehan, Fortin, Hernan, Mahoney; 2nd: Ryan, Costa, Lehr, Campbell; 4th: Regan, Hunt, Sacks, Teague). The 12 and under boys went further, completely dominating their race, and taking first, second and third places (1st Hernan, Dickinson, Berg, Zappolo; 2nd: Massotta, Roach, Conway, Hospod; 3rd: McCarthy, Faber, Daly, Gammon). The 12 and under girls followed closely with another win and second place finish, maintaining Cohasset's early lead (1st: Daley, Durkin, Garber, Musto; 2nd: Grossman, Shea, Madge, Englander). The 17 and under boys pushed further ahead with a win and a second place in their 200 yard medley relay (1st: Ingber, Bilton, McCarthy, Faber; 2nd: Blackburn, Roach, Flynn, Previte), while the girls consolidated the score with second, third and fourth position finishes (2nd: Larson, Anderson, Garber, Lehr; 3rd: Weston, Faber, Foley, Regan; 4th: Bugley, Afshar, Ogrodnik, Orsini).

In the early phase of the individual events, a pattern of second, third and fourth place finishes was maintained. In the 50 yard freestyle both the under 10 boys and girls finished second, third and fourth (boys: 2nd: Poh, R., 3rd: Cunningham, C.; 4th: Musto, C.; girls: 2nd: Meehan, S., 3rd: Lehr, S.; 4th: Mahoney, C.). Again, in the 12 and under 100 yard individual medley, both boys and girls took second, third and fourth positions (boys: 2nd: Dickinson, R., 3rd: Conway, C.; 4th: McCarthy, J.; girls: 2nd: Durkin, L.; 3rd: Daley, M.; 4th: Musto, L.). Breaking out of this pattern, the 14 and under boys, and girls, placed first in the 100 yard individual medley (boys: 1st McCarthy, W.; 3rd: Flynn, C.; girls: 1st Lehr, R.; 2nd: Hurley, K.). Cohasset, still narrowly ahead, completed the first phase of the individual events with a second and third from the 17 and under boys (2nd: Ingber, D.; 3rd: Hurley, T.), and a win and third place from the girls (1st Orsini, M.; 3rd: Foley, C.).

The team's success continued with four early wins in the 25 yard freestyle (boys, 8 and under 1st Doonan, B.; 2nd: Durkin, T.; 3rd: Porter, L.; girls, 8 and under: 1st Zappolo, C.; 3rd: Jennings, M.; 5th: Libby, S.; boys, 10 and under: 1st: Hunt, A., 3rd: Shipp, A.; 5th: Hurley, P.; girls, 10 and under: 1st Mahoney, C.; 3rd: Teague, M.; 4th: Fortin: S.). The 50 yard freestyles also produced wins for both under 12 boys and girls (boys: 1st Berg, P.; 3rd: Hernan, A.; 4th: Zappolo, N.; girls: 1st: Garber, C.; 2nd: Englander, E.; 3rd: Whoriskey, K.) and the 14 and under boys (1st Bilton, B.; 3rd: Flynn, C.; 4th: Previte, J.). The 14 and under girls narrowly missed a first, but took second, third and fifth places (2nd: Garber, R., 3rd: Anderson, C., 5th: Foley, T.). And the under 17 boys finished second, third and fourth, while the girls managed a third and fourth place (boys: 2nd: Faber, S.; 3rd: Roach, J.; 4th: Blackburn, C.; girls: 3rd: Larson, J.; 4th: Weston, E.). Cohasset had extended its lead, but more work was needed if the team was to secure an overall win.

The 25 yard butterfly started a little shakily with the 8 and under boys making third, fourth and fifth positions (3rd: Durkin, T.; 4th: Carrier, J.; 5th: Campbell, B.). The girls, however, swept the board, taking first, second and third places (1st: Lehr, T.; 2nd: Madge, K.; 3rd: Fontaine, E.). Results continued to be mixed in this event, but Cohasset managed 2 further wins and finished this section still holding onto the lead (boys, 10 and under: 2nd: Doonan, P.; 3rd: Cunningham, C.; 5th: Ulmer, W.; girls 10 and under: 1st Herman, E.; 2nd: Campbell, A.; 3rd: Lehr, S.; boys, 12 and under: 1st Berg, P.; 3rd: McCarthy, D.; 4th: Zappolo, N.; girls, 12 and under: 2nd: Garber, C.; 3rd: Musto, L.; 4th: James, K.).

Confidence continued to build as the program moved to the 50-yard butterflies. Excellent times from the 14 and under girls and boys, and the 17 and under boys, produced three further wins. Cohasset, once again, held a comfortable lead (boys, 14 and under: 1st McCarthy, W.; girls, 14 and under: 1st: Garber, R.; 2nd: Afshar, Y.; 4th: Ogrodnik, M.; boys, 17 and under: 1st Ingber, D.; 3rd: Hurley, T.; girls, 17 and under: 2nd: Orsini, M.; 3rd: Faber, A.).

The 25-yard breaststroke began with second, third and fifth places for the 8 and under girls and wins for the 8 and under boys, the 10 and under boys, and the 10 and under girls (8 and under girls: 2nd: Teague, K.; 3rd: Sullivan, O.; 4th: Jennings, M.; 8 and under boys: 1st Doonan, B.; 3rd: Porter, L.; 6th: Lynner, W.; 10 and under boys: 1st: Hunt, A.; 3rd: Musto, C.; 5th: Doonan, P.; 10 and under girls: 1st Fortin, S.; 2nd: Hunt, N.; 3rd: Costa, A.). The 50-yard breaststroke produced one further win (boys, 12 and under: 1st: Conway, C.; 2nd: Dickinson, R.; 4th: Roach, K.; girls 12 and under: 2nd: Sida, C.; 3rd: Harrington, K.; boys 14 and under: 2nd: Bilton, B.; girls 14 and under: 2nd: Anderson, C.; 4th: Lehr, R.; 6th: Harrington, B.; boys, 17 and under: 2nd: Faber, S.; 4th: Roach, J.; girls, 17 and under: 2nd: Afshar, Y.; 3rd: Faber, A.; 4th: Foley, C.).

In the backstroke events, although performances continued to be more uneven than in Cohasset's first outing, the team won three out of the four 25-yard races (boys 8 and under: 2nd: Carrier, J.; 3rd: Buckley, T.; 4th: Shipp, M.; girls 8 and under: 1st Mahoney, M.; 2nd: Sullivan, O.; 6th: Dickenson, R.; boys, 10 and under: 1st Poh, R.; 2nd: Shipp, A.; 3rd: Hurley, P.; girls, 10 and under: 1st Herman, E.; 3rd: Teague, M.; 5th: Regan, M.), and three of the six 50-yard backstroke events (boys, 12 and under: 1st: Hernan, A.; 2nd: Hospod, T.; 3rd: Masotta, B.; girls, 12 and under: 1st Durkin, L.; 2nd: Daley, M.; 4th: Harrington, K; boys, 14 and under: 1st: Previte, J.; 2nd: Flynn, C.; girls 14 and under: 2nd: Larson, J.; 3rd: Regan, D; 4th: Harrington, B.; boys, 17 and under: 2nd: Blackburn, C.; 3rd: Hurley, T.; girls, 17 and under: 2nd: Bugley, A.; 3rd: Weston, E.; 4th: McCarthy, K.). By this stage in the meet Cohasset was 100 points ahead of Duxbury.

In the final phase of competition, Cohasset produced a strong finish, winning seven of the eight free relays and ending their second meet of the season by a substantial margin (boys 8 and under, 100 yards free relay: 1st: Carrier, Porter, Durkin, Doonan; 3rd: Buckley, Campbell, Lynner, Queenan; 4th: Durkin, Shipp, MacCormack, Yeager; girls 8 and under, 100 yards free relay: 1st: Mahoney, Jennings, Lehr, Zappolo; 3rd: Fontaine, Kelly, Madge, Sullivan; 4th: Musto, Regan, Culhane, Libby; boys 10 and under, 100 yards free relay: 1st Doonan, Cunningham, Poh, Hunt; 3rd: Kelly, Porter, Shipp, Ulmer; 4th: DeGiacomo, Muir, Parker, Sceery; girls 10 and under, 100 yards free relay: 1st Mahoney, Campbell, Lehr, Hernan; 2nd: Fortin, Regan, Teague, Meehan; 4th: Durkin, Coggins, Costa, Baumgarten; boys 12 and under, 100 yards free relay: 1st Zappolo, Conway, Dickinson, Herman; 2nd: Berg, Faber, McCarthy, Hospod; 5th: Roach, Gammon, Masotta, Kuppens; girls 12 and under, 100 yards free relay: 1st Daley, Englander, Garber, Durkin; 3rd: Musto, Shea, Sida, Whoriskey; 4th: James, Madge, Muir, Muir; boys 17 and under, 200 yards free relay: 1st Faber, Ingber, Bilton, McCarthy: 3rd: Hurley, Roach, Previte, Blackburn; girls 17 and under, 200 yards free relay: 2nd: Anderson, Garber, Larson, Lehr; 3rd: Foley, Scribner, Hurley, McCarthy; 4th: Orsini, Bugley, Faber, Foley).

Congratulations, once again, to all the Cohasset swimmers for another week of great racing and, of course, to Allison Hughes and Michael Monaghan for another tremendous coaching success. A big thank you is also due to the many parents who volunteer as coordinators, timers, runners, concession stand managers and, of course, cheerleaders who make the meets the exciting and well-run events that they are.

Back to School

School Days...

They're coming very soon. Time to think about books and backpacks, fads and fashions once again. But that's not all.

These days, there is a lot more on family's minds than just reading, writing and arithmetic. There are other big questions like:

- ✓ What new ideas will educators bring to the classroom in 2000-2001?
- ✓ What will the debate on MCAS testing mean to your children this year?
- ✓ How has the debate on Education Reform affected local school budgets?

They'll find the answers this Back to School supplement, along with an insider's guide to the trends, toys, tools and fashions this year's students will require.

A not-so bitter man

Lance Norris makes them laugh on WZLX's morning show

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Lance Norris might be the most listened to person in Cohasset. Heck, Norris might even be one of the most listened to people in the state.

You might not recognize the name, or even the voice — but anyone who has grown up listening to Boston radio legend Charles Laquidara has certainly heard his work.

For 30 years Laquidara has been that bright, good-morning voice, hosting the always high-rated "Big Mattress" show on WBCN-FM, and now the Charles Laquidara Radio Hour on WZLX-FM. And for the past 14 years, Norris has been part of the show. Now as the show's head writer, Norris can be heard every morning, usually making some sort of bitter, nasty comment that just forces you to laugh.

Norris, who has been a Cohasset resident off and on since 1972, graduated in 1980 from Cohasset High School where he took part football, track and wrestling. He even played on the girls softball team one year. "It was right after the whole Title IX thing. I even led the league in home runs but they didn't name me a league all-star," he said. Norris said despite the extra power he brought to the team, the Skippers just couldn't beat Hull. "They had one pitcher that was just great."

He graduated from Whitman College in Washington state with a degree in theatre arts, and got a job working at WBCN through a few friends in 1986. "Charles (Laquidara) had everyone start out on the request line," Norris said. He got fired when he had a run-in with the station's morning traffic reporter at the time, Eli.

"He used to be in a real helicopter but now, he was in a studio and would call in with a two-way radio. They'd have chopper sounds playing in the background." Norris said one day he managed to get Eli upset and told him to just come down to the studio and do his report. "He really believed he had a helicopter." As a result, said Norris, he and his friends would pretend they were birds and slam into Eli's glass window.

Norris said he started doing some writing for the show and producers liked what he was doing. Laquidara's show was infamous for its fake commercials, and Norris had a hand in writing them. He said read all the newspapers to come up with 15 or 17 jokes every morning.

In 1996, Infinity Broadcasting, which owns both WBCN and WZLX, moved the "Big Mattress" show to WZLX in order to bring the "Howard Stern Show" to WBCN in the morning slot, and Norris moved with the show.

The feature that got Norris regular airtime was his "Ask a Bitter Man", where Norris, pretends to be a, well, bitter man, who answers fan mail sent to his Cohasset PO box. The bit originated back when Norris was the station director in college, and he would answer listener complaints by using his "Bitter Man" persona. It was meant to be a spoof of a Boston television station's "Ask the Manager" feature.

"I was looking for something to do that would get me more air time," he said. According to Norris, sometimes he will answer an actual listener's questions, but more often than not, he'll just make the question up. Recent "letters were signed by Ken Teddady of Cape and Islands, Mass. (Do you think Michael Skakel should be tried as an adult, or what?), and Tom Judge of Red Lion, Mass. (Why do they call it a hamburger, when there is no ham in it?).

Laquidara recently announced he move to Hawaii, where he already has a house and where his wife already is living. WZLX has announced that Laquidara will be replaced by radio personality Tai and well-known Boston comedian Steve Sweeney, but Norris's role has yet to be determined.

"I'm sure I will be included in some capacity," he said. If he decides not to be, he plans to concentrate more on writing.

Radio personality Lance Norris is a Cohasset resident.

Norris's list of writing credits is impressive. He was a contributing editor with National Lampoon, and wrote for Politically Incorrect with Bill Mahar and Saturday Night Live's "Weekend Update" feature with Norm MacDonald. Norris said MacDonald, who was eventually fired from the show, "liked to see how bad of a joke he could get away with. He would purposely kill a well-crafted joke, with a less-funny punch line. He would always make me wince."

He has also written scripts for new series by Michael Richards (Kraemer from "Seinfeld"), and Anthony Clark ("Boston Common") and Mike O'Malley ("The Mike O'Malley Show". EPSN's "The Rick" commercials), as well as a number of other scripts in development.

He also used to do some acting, but that was put on hold in 1989 when he shattered his kneecap while filming a movie. "It was a bar-fight scene, and I was told by the director not to overshadow the actor in the foreground," Norris remembered. "So naturally I had to." On the eighth take Norris landed on his knee and fractured it. He said when he stood up the patella bone was "ground into 17 places." At the hospital, the attending doctor put a hard cast on his knee, which Norris said a doctor later told him "even a first-year medical student knows you don't do that."

At Beth Israel Hospital in Boston, he was told there was a 90 percent chance the leg would have to come off. But 19 operations later, the leg is still there. Norris said doctors have replaced the bone with pieces from his hip, as he is too young for plastic. The injury put Norris in the hospital for months and he was confined to a wheelchair for a while. Not that he hasn't had fun with it. He did the show for a period from his hotel room. And when it comes to disabilities, he says "I'm the hardest on people with disabilities. I think if you're handicapped, you should only be able to park in the handicapped spots. That's what they're there for." He recently approached Town Manager Mark Haddad about a spot on the town's disabilities committee. "Cohasset is probably the worst town. I've seen people pull right into a handicapped spot, even though there's another opening three spots down."

Norris is now able to walk with a cane, and usually gets out for a round of golf once a week. "My project for the summer is to able to walk nine holes down at Green Harbor [Golf Course in Marshfield]."

Norris isn't a complete stranger to the local political scene. This past winter he ran for a spot on the Paul Pratt Library Board of Trustees. He read that three spots were open on the board, and no one had filed papers. He did it in an attempt to open up, what he perceives, a less than friendly library board. "The staff there is fabulous," said Norris, but added, "I just felt that the board was building a $3 million Friends of Patience Towle Clubhouse" about the proposed new library at the old Osgood School. (Towle is the chairman of the trustees and won her bid for reelection along with two other incumbents).

But the results were not to be for Norris. "I lost by a good 400 votes."

His day usually begins in WZLX's Prudential Building office around 5 a.m. — 4 a.m. if he is hosting, which he does when Laquidara goes on vacation. Preparation for the show, which airs from 5:30-9 a.m., consists of Norris, with Laquidara and other producers and writers reading the newspaper, and watching the news and just randomly shouting comments out. "We make fun of everything," he said. Norris said he misses Laquidara's editorial guidance when he hosts the show with Patrick Murray, another WZLX personality. "He tends to egg me on, and that's when I get in trouble."

He usually is back home in Cohasset by noon, having already put in an eight-hour day. He lives off Pond Street with his wife Amy, his daughter, Savannah, 8, and 19-month old son Ray. In fact his children are part of the reason he chose to live in Cohasset, as opposed to Boston. "I wanted my daughter to go to school here," he said. "I'm really glad they built the new Osgood School."

Norris said he recently attended his 20-year high school reunion and was amazed how many people said 'I wish I was raising my kids in Cohasset'.

"I enjoyed growing up in Cohasset...It's changed a bit, but it's still nice."

Little Harbor sewer study contract awarded

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Cohasset Town Manager Mark Haddad said the contract for a sewer feasibility study in the Little Harbor area was awarded to Stearns and Wheeler, LLC of Burlington.

Three groups responded to the town's Request For Proposal (RFP), and though Stearns & Wheeler's bid of $19,134 was not the lowest – Tutela Engineering Associates, Inc. of Providence, R.I. and Wilmington, Mass. submitted a bid of $9,900 – Haddad said he chose Stearns because of its "superior technical proposal" and its experience in dealing with underground water drainage issues.

The annual town meeting in March appropriated $20,000 for the study.

Coler & Colantonio, Inc. of Hingham also submitted proposals for the study, at a cost of $600 more than Stearns & Wheeler's.

According to Chapter 30B of the Uniform Procurement Act, the lowest bid resulting from an RFP does not have to be accepted, as it does when a general request for bids is issued. With an RFP, the town must examine and evaluate a group's technical proposal before looking at its bid.

According to Haddad, his decision to award the contract to Stearns & Wheeler was based on the "best interest of the town." He decided against Tutela and Coler & Colantonio because both groups already performed studies of the area. "We have a good working relationship with Tutela," said Haddad, "but they did the initial study four or five years ago and said the area shouldn't be sewered."

> "It will be a fresh face looking at the issue."
> — Town Manager Mark Haddad

Tutela currently serves as project manager on ongoing water and sewer projects in the town.

Haddad said Coler & Colantonio performed a feasibility study for the grassroots civic group made up of residents of the Little Harbor area, Citizens for Equitable Environmental Solutions (CEES), in the past and would be essentially "reviewing their own work." He also said the company did not have as much experience when dealing with underground water drainage.

"It will be a fresh face looking at the issue," said Haddad about his decision.

Sewer commissioner Gary Vanderweil said he was happy with the decision and expects the group to begin the study immediately.

The town is obliged to come up with a solution to its wastewater management problems as part of an agreement for judgment with the state Department of Environmental Protection. The Little Harbor and Lily Pond areas of Cohasset were left out of the town's initial sewering plans, but were designated by the board of health as "priority" areas. At the time, residents of the two areas were to be required to privately fund upgrades to their septic systems. CEES formed in 1997 in response to this decision and paid for Coler and Colantonio's study of the Little Harbor area. Town meeting appropriated funds to extend the sewer installation project across Route 3A to Lily Pond in March, 1999.

After discussions with engineers, CEES formulated a plan for a privately funded septic system and treatment plant that could cost as much as $6 million to serve the about 275 homes in the Little Harbor watershed.

Vanderweil said that an initial study of Little Harbor showed it to be "fairly free of septic influences," and explained this study will be a "follow-up to see if a practical solution can be developed that would be less expensive than septic upgrades for that area."

Under Title V laws, houses cannot be sold unless their septic systems conform to new, tougher state standards. All the houses in the Little Harbor area, which includes parts of Jerusalem Road, Atlantic Avenue, Beach Street and Gammons Road, use septic systems.

THE DESIGNING WOMAN

DOING THE RIGHT FENG

One of the latest trends in home and office decoration involves "feng shui" (wind and water), the ancient Chinese practice that considers the environment as a metaphor for everything that happens in life. The basis of this idea is that energy (chi) has its own personality in every space. Therefore, by arranging living space in harmony with nature, we can bring benefit to our lives. With this philosophy in mind, advocates of feng shui offer these suggestions for making your bedroom a better place to sleep: To begin with, the bed should be placed against a solid wall, in the corner farthest from the entry, with the greatest view of the entire room. Mirrors facing the bed will cause the spirit to wander at night. The bed should not be placed directly opposite the door or window because this positioning drains your energy. Finally, do not store things beneath your bed. Clutter here or anywhere in the home, including basements and attics disrupts clear thinking and harmony.

Feng Shui is a Chinese art designed to bring balance and harmony to life through the strategic placement of objects in a home and buildings in the environment. THE DESIGNING WOMAN stays current with interior techniques of various cultures and can help you create a home that is comforting and energizing. We listen to each client's needs and present a number of decorating options that will meet those needs. Our thoughtful, individualized interior design plans include the selection and coordination of flooring, window treatments, wallcoverings and furniture. Call us at 383-6411 to arrange a consultation.

HINT: Fresh flowers, healthy plants and clean aquariums and fish bowls all bring positive chi into your home.

Town closer to ALS ambulance service

"At that time we plan to evaluate skills maintenance and attempt to determine if skill deterioration is a problem within this low ALS volume service," said Nelson said in his letter to the OEMS.

The difference between ALS and the current basic life support that EMTs perform, is that paramedics can administer IVs and drug therapy, according to Silvia.

"EMTs can only do certain types of care," said Town Manager Mark Haddad. "Let's say I have a heart attack. EMTs can show up and administer CPR, but can't administer drugs. Paramedics can administer drugs."

The difference becomes crucial considering it takes an average of 18 minutes to transport a person from Cohasset to South Shore Hospital, which is 12 miles away, said Silvia. It takes paramedics the same amount of time to come from the hospital to Cohasset. "Our response averages 4-5 minutes from the station to scene. By having paramedics in town, we get paramedics to the patients that need attention 13-14 minutes earlier," he said.

Currently, the town's ambulance can only be used for Basic Life Support. A paramedic unit from South Shore Hospital is normally dispatched and meets the town's ambulance en route.

"One of the most important things we've done here is to make one of our priorities the creation of a paramedic department," said Haddad.

The town currently staffs 23 firefighters. Though all 23 are trained as first-responders, 12 are EMTs, and five are paramedics.

According to Silvia, paramedics have to go through a higher level of training. "They have to go through not only classroom, but clinical rotations in hospitals, as well as ALS training while riding in ambulances,' he said.

With the waiver in hand, the town is now waiting for the state to process the application. It also is currently waiting for approval by the Federal Drug Administration to allow the town to carry drugs on the ambulance.

Principal is named at CMHS

assistant principal in Northborough from 1987-93, and assistant principal at Whitman-Hanson Regional High School from 1985-87.

He has a bachelor's degree in English from Rutgers University, a masters in school administration from Bridgewater State College, a doctorate degree in English from Boston College, and advanced graduate studies credits at Harvard Graduate School of Education.

Jones and three other candidates were recommended for the $90,000 position by a 10-member interview committee, made up of school committee members, administrators, teachers, parents and students. Malvey said Jones was "by far" the highest rated candidate by the committee.

According to Malvey, a number of reasons influenced his and the committee's decision. "He was a wide variety of academic and instructional experience, excellent training through Harvard University and the Commonwealth Leadership Academy. He is considered a scholar and an intellect. He has had progressive advancement through the administrative ranks, from teacher, to department head, to assistant principal to principal. He is knowledgeable in curriculum and accreditation, which we will be going through in the next two years. He is an excellent supervisor and evaluator of staff, very articulate on educational issues.

"I think he is the person to lead us forward."

He also is confident that Jones won't let education "take a back seat" during the school's renovation scheduled to begin next year.

Malvey said 39 people applied for the job, including 12 candidates from out-of-state and current assistant principal Jack DeLorenzo. The interview committee met with between 10-12 semi-finalists and recommended four to Malvey, who has the power to hire principals under the 1993 Education Reform Act.

In the new area, plans are to restrict the type of monument with some flat ones being required.

"We're pretty confident that we can continue the open look," Pratt said.

Excavated soil would be used to raise the part of the cemetery that is below the flood plain.

Town meeting will ultimately have the say on whether the project estimated to cost about $600,000 will go forward. Pratt said the income from the sale of graves and columbarium space would pay for the debt service.

Pratt said local veterans groups might be willing to swap some graves in Woodside where they have a large plot so a memorial garden with a monument to the town's Gold Star mothers could be installed in the expanded section.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said it would be the selectmen's decision to put the expansion on the warrant for the fall's special town meeting. Selectmen were receptive to the proposed expansion plans last February when they encouraged Pratt to return after he'd seen the other boards, Haddad said.

The cemetery committee submitted the botanical plan to the conservation commission, which will issue an "order of conditions" once the project, gets a number from the Department of Environmental Protection.

The board of health has given the project the go-ahead.

Zoning board members plan to deliberate on whether to grant the necessary special permits at their next meeting Aug. 7 if the board receives the order of conditions from the conservation commission by that date.

closed since July, 1997 when Barry declared that there was no more room in the existing landfill for additional waste material. Later, Barry voluntarily surrendered the landfill's site assignment to the town, but had planned to pursue a new site assignment in Area 5-B. The site assignment is the chief local approval issued by a city or town approving a landfill. Barry was unable to apply for the new site assignment because of a state-imposed moratorium on new landfills and expansions. The state is planning to lift the moratorium in a few months. But the new bylaw prevents Barry from even applying for a site assignment at CHL's current location.

Barry and his attorney, Robert Schwandt, could not be reached for comment. Schwandt sent a letter to the Reilly's office urging the attorney general to overturn the bylaw. Schwandt claimed the bylaw was merely a re-submission of a bylaw rejected by voters at the 1999 Annual Town Meeting. State law prohibits the re-submission of rejected bylaws until two years have passed. Schwandt also claimed that the bylaw was nothing more than an attempt to outlaw CHL specifically. Town Counsel Paul DeRensis and SAFE sent letters to the attorney general's office refuting Schwandt's claims.

Reilly also approved two other landfill-related bylaws. One bylaw prohibits the siting of any landfill in the town's water resource protection district. The other bylaw requires the board of health to conduct an extensive public review process when any person or company seeks a site assignment for a new landfill or expansion. With the new bylaws, there are few places in town where an individual or company could actually open a new landfill. There are a few light industrial areas left in town, one near the mulch piles on Route 3A and another near the Hagerty Property. When asked whether there were any industrial areas remaining in town large enough to accommodate a new landfill, Building Inspector Robert Egan said, "Probably not."

Even without the new bylaw, CHL faced considerable hurdles preventing it from getting a new site assignment. The Department of Environmental Protection (DEP) is planning to pursue penalties against CHL for illegally placing 100 tons of excess material on the slopes of the landfill. DEP has not yet determined what type of penalty it will impose against CHL. DEP had also hinted that it would not consider any expansion plans until CHL and the town settled outstanding environmental issues related to the existing landfill.

CHL and the town have been negotiating a closure settlement for the existing landfill since it closed in 1997. Negotiators for both sides have been unable to reach an agreement on a closure plan that would protect the town from any environmental damage caused by the landfill. Also, there are still several lawsuits and appeals related to CHL winding through the court system.

Locals testify for moratorium

Several Cohasset residents have testified in favor of maintaining a state-imposed moratorium on landfills at Department of Environmental Protection (DEP) hearings. DEP is planning to lift a moratorium that has been in place for several years. During the moratorium, DEP has developed a solid waste master plan that allegedly will improved recycling and waste management in Massachusetts. But critics of the master plan say it isn't ambitious enough and should be revised.

John K. McNabb Jr. testified in DEP's Lakeville headquarters on behalf of Clean Water Action of Boston, and Kevin O'Donnell testified on behalf of the anti-landfill group Stop Any Further Expansion (SAFE). Both McNabb and O'Donnell said the moratorium should remain in place so DEP can revise the solid waste master plan.

"DEP seems pretty determined to lift the moratorium," McNabb said. "They wrote a plan that, in the press at least, sounds like it will work hard for waste reduction. We need more recycling, not more landfills. We want DEP to keep the moratorium in place and set stronger recycling goals. The only thing in the DEP plan that is definite is that it wants to lift the moratorium."

McNabb said it is doubtful that DEP will extend the moratorium. Despite DEP's determination to pave the way for new landfills, McNabb, O'Donnell and other supporters of the moratorium plan to testify at all of DEP's hearings, which conclude on Friday in Boston.

Under-age drinking parties in town total of 40 local minors for possession of alcohol.

Arrested at 497 Beechwood St. and charged with minor in possession of alcohol were James W. Manning, 20, of Marshfield and Jessica Hines-Stephan, 19, of Clinton, N.Y. Charged with minor transporting alcohol were: Anne M. Garcia, 18, Lori B. Buswell, 19, Courtney A. January, 19, Lauren Ristuccia, 18, and Jessica Mary Gibson, 18, all of Marshfield and Jennifer E. Sheehan, 19, of Plymouth.

In addition to McNamara, arrests at 470 King St. included: Jill M. Magner, 18, of 46 Elm Court; Kayleen Devine, 19 of 20 Buttonwood Lane; Catherine E. Brister, 18, of 312 Forest Ave.; Meredith Dickinson O'Hayre, 18, of Hull; Tiffany M. Bolster, 19 of 15 Stockbridge St.; Paul Michael Quintin, 20, of 239 Fairoaks Lane; Alyssa C. McNamara, 19, of 470 King St.; Mark B. Equi, 19, of 27 Wood Way; Eric Wenmark, 20, 27 Riverview Dr.; David Ronald Berry, 19, of Scituate; Jacob B. Motley, 19, of 42 Rocky Lane; John F. Whoriskey, 19, of 6 Ripley Road; William P. Kearney, 19, of 1 Forest Ave.; and Derek L. Bugley, 19, of 16 Fernway.

Sgt. Jackson said 19 of the 22 minors arrested were placed in a diversionary program during which they must attend a Mothers Against Driving Drunk workshop at Quincy District Court and pay a $50 fee to MADD. The arrests won't appear on their records, Jackson said. The program is offered to those without prior arrests or involvement with the Cohasset Police Department, he said.

Berry of 57 Pratt Court in Scituate is returning to court Aug. 8 for a pre-trial conference, Jackson said. Charges against McNamara and Bugley were continued without a finding for three months. The charge of minor in possession against Bolster was continued without a finding and the charge of disturbing the peace was dismissed Jackson said. All arrested had to pay court costs. Those not placed in the diversionary program paid court costs, he said.

Selectmen irked over town counsel increase request

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Selectmen are upset over town counsel's request for a raise in his retainer and hourly fees — three months after the town approved its budget for FY-01.

Town counsel Paul DeRensis said in a letter to selectmen and Town Manager Mark Haddad last month that, because of rising costs, he is requesting an increase in the town's monthly retainer and hourly fee. Currently, the town pays DeRensis's firm $140 an hour for work on any town litigation matter, and $4,000 a month for a retainer. DeRensis asked for an increase to $150 an hour and $4,500 a month.

"He never said anything when we voted on the budget," complained Selectman Merle Brown at the board's July 11 meeting. "To come in June 27, when we set the budget in March...this irks me"

Selectmen Tom Callahan, Ronnie McMorris and Mike Sullivan also expressed their displeasure with the request. According to DeRensis, though the town's retainer fees for the year total $48,000, he says his firm, if it was billed hourly, does more than $76,000 in work. The retainer fee increase would bring the yearly cost to $54,000.

Callahan, who is a lawyer, criticized DeRensis for the supposed high costs, saying town counsel should be able to curtail unnecessary research within the firm. He also said that the hourly rate was high enough already. "I know this is the high end, I've bid for some of these jobs."

Callahan's comments were backed up when Haddad reported that the town's hourly rate is higher than in Hull, Hingham, Duxbury, Pembroke and Norwell.

McMorris and Haddad met with DeRensis about the issue Tuesday, and according to Haddad, the problems were worked out. Though he declined to get specific, Haddad said, "I think everything's going to be fine."

He said he and McMorris will give a full report to the board at their July 25 meeting.

OBITUARIES

Cheryle Ann Sullivan

Cheryle Ann Sullivan, 45, of Cohasset, died July 15, 2000, in her home following an extended illness.

A graduate of Scituate High School and accomplished hair stylist, she was the former owner/operator of Reflections Hair Salon in Cohasset. In addition to owning this salon for 10 years, she worked at Hair Flair in Hingham for five years and Stop & Shop. She styled the hair of many stars performing at the South Shore Music Circus.

She enjoyed bingo, gardening and billiards.

She leaves a son, Daniel J. Nardo; her companion, Scott Catrambone; her mother and step-father, Lucille and Gerard Conte of Cohasset; a brother, Daniel J. Sullivan of Plymouth; two nieces and a nephew.

A funeral Mass was celebrated in Saint Anthony Church Cohasset.

Arrangements were by the McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home, Cohasset.

Memorial contributions may be made to Hospice of the South Shore, 100 Bay State Drive, Braintree 02184.

John Coert Campbell

John Coert Campbell, 88, a specialist in international affairs in government and business, died July 16 at his home after a brief illness.

Mr. Campbell worked for the State Department for more than 20 years and took part in many tours of duty including post-war planning during World War II and Eastern European affairs during 1948 to 1952.

Mr. Campbell served on the policy planning staff from 1953 to 1955 and from 1967 to 1968.

He was the Secretary of the American Delegation to the Council of Foreign Ministers and the Paris Peace Conference in 1946. He also was an adviser to the American Delegation to the Danube Conference in 1948 and a consultant to the State Department in the 1960s and 1970s.

For 30 years, Mr. Campbell was an editor and senior research fellow of the Council on Foreign Relations in New York. From 1977 to 1978, he was director of studies, specializing in U.S. foreign policy, Soviet and Eastern European affairs, the Middle East and Latin America.

He wrote many books on U.S. foreign policy including: "The United States in World Affairs, 1945 to 1949" (3 volumes), "Defense of the Middle East," "Tito's Separate Road," "Successful Negotiation: Trieste 1954."

Mr. Campbell also wrote frequently for "Foreign Affairs" and reviewed all books on the Soviet Union, Eastern Europe and the Middle East for the quarterly for 25 years.

He was the former vice president and a member of the Governors of the Middle East Institute, a member of the International Research and Exchange Board and of the board of editors for "Slavic Review."

Mr. Campbell was a pioneer scholar in the study of the Balkans, especially Romania and Yugoslavia. In 1980, he received the award of the American Association for the Advancement of Slavic Studies for distinguished contributions to that field.

Born in New York City, he was raised in Bronxville, N.Y. He was educated at Lincoln School of Teachers College, Phillips Exeter Academy and graduated from Harvard University in 1933. He also received his doctorate from Harvard.

Mr. Campbell taught at the University of Louisville from 1940 to 1941 and was a visiting lecturer at Columbia University from 1967 to 1968.

He lived in Westchester County, N.Y. for many years until moving to Cohasset in 1978.

In Cohasset, Mr. Campbell was active at the Second Congregational Church. He was also director of the Cohasset Historical Society and a volunteer driver for the American Cancer Society and for the Cohasset Social League.

He was also a member of the Old Goats.

Mr. Campbell leaves his wife, Mary (Hillis) Campbell; two sons, Allan R. Campbell of Auburndale and Alexander Bruce Campbell of Denver, Colo.; a brother, Walter L. Campbell of Norfolk, Conn.; and three grandchildren.

A memorial service will be held Saturday, July 22, 11 a.m., at the Second Congregational Church, 43 Highland St., Cohasset.

Donations in Mr. Campbell's memory may be made to the Second Congregational Church, 43 Highland St., Cohasset, 02025; the Cohasset Historical Society, 14 Summer St., Cohasset, 02025; or the Council on Foreign Relations, Department of State, Washington, D.C.

Arrangements were made by the McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home, 1 Summer St., Cohasset.

Garden party

Come to a preservation garden party to benefit the historical society and restoration of the Captain John Wilson House.

There will be hors d'oeuvres and libations. Bring a friend.

Sponsored by the Cohasset Historical Society at the Lothrop House, 14 Summer St., on Sunday, Aug. 6, from 4 to 6 p.m., rain or shine. Reservations are $15 per person. Mail to the historical society, 14 Summer St.

For information call the society at 383-1434 or John Hovorka at 383-0766; Martha Gjesteby at 383-1614.

Band concert

The Cohasset Recreation Department's second concert on the common is Tuesday, July 25, at 7:30 p.m.

Performing will be the 30-piece South Shore Concert band under the direction of Richard P. Whitmarsh.

Concerts are available via the generosity of the South Shore Playhouse Associates Inc. and a matching fund grant from the American Federation of Musicians of New York City. Concerts are free. Please bring a lawn chair or blanket to sit on and insect repellent.

Playground, trees damaged at new Osgood School

Scituate man charged after alleged joyride

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

The investigation following an arrest of a Scituate man for operating under the influence of alcohol led to further charges of vandalism at the new Joseph Osgood School, Cohasset police said.

Just before midnight July 4, police received a call about a carload of kids allegedly driving all over the lawn at the school off Sohier Street.

About an hour later at 1 a.m. July 5, police stopped a vehicle on Nichols Road and charged the operator, David R. Berry, 19, of 57 Pratt Court in Scituate, with OUI, failure to stay within marked lanes and having no license in his possession. Four Cohasset youths were passengers in the Toyota Camry at the time police stopped the vehicle.

While at the scene police noticed fresh damage to the front bumper of the vehicle which was towed to the police station. Police allege further investigation revealed the damage to the bumper was consistent with vandalism of trees and playground equipment at the new Osgood School. Vandalism at the school caused an estimated $2,445 in damage.

When Berry was arraigned on July 5 on the initial charges, police sought a warrant at Quincy District Court and charged Berry with destruction of property over $250, negligent operation of a motor vehicle, leaving the scene after property damage, trespassing on land and trespassing to damage trees. Berry is slated to return to court on Aug. 8.

The four Cohasset youths in the car with Berry at the time he was stopped for OUI were taken to the station and released to the custody of their parents. Police did not charge them because the time lag between the OUI arrest and vandalism incident would have made it difficult to prove they were in the car earlier at Osgood when the vandalism occurred. Police said there was no alcohol in the vehicle but it did appear that the youths had been drinking.

Harbor mooring waiting list continues to grow

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

One old problem has been solved, but another still remains in Cohasset Harbor.

The long-awaited and much-needed harbor dredging project removed its last scoop of silt on Feb. 18, but the dredging of the federal channel and inner harbor did not provide much relief for the 400-odd people waiting for a mooring in the harbor.

Harbormaster John "Moose" Winters said "at best, a few" mooring spaces were created near the Cohasset Yacht Club off Howard Gleason Road by the dredging, but the grid for that area has not been drawn up yet.

There are approximately 400 people on the waiting list for one of the harbor's 248 moorings. Of those moorings, 35 for commercial fishing boats.

In an effort to shrink the list, the town's harbor committee will explore the possibility of creating mooring spaces on the Cohasset side of the Gulph River. According to harbor committee chairman John Bertolami, boats moored in the gulph would have limited access to the harbor, because of the rocks guarding the mouthway from the river to the harbor. "I think it's a long way away from happening, but just thought it was worth looking into."

While at low tide, the river flows into the harbor, crashing over a series of rocks between the Marine River Railway and the Harbormaster's shed, but at high-tide, water from the harbor flows into the river's basin.

"We're talking about small boats who just want to use the Gulph," said Bertolami. "It's a difficult process to go from the Gulph to the harbor," he said.

The river is the dividing line between Cohasset and Scituate, with the official boundary line down the middle of the river. The Cohasset side falls under the harbormaster's jurisdiction.

Winters has said he is against the idea of moorings in the Gulph, calling it "impractical."

"It has virtually no access, other than going through the Gulph River on a perfect tide," he said. "In that case, you can't get back."

Prior to the recent dredging project, it had been nearly 40 years since the harbor had last been dredged. Years of silt that had accumulated in the harbor and its channel had created a hinderance for local fishermen who complained of difficulty getting their crafts out at low tide. The $1.2 million federally-funded project began in September of 1998, and removed 107,000 cubic yards of silt prior to its completion last February.

The dredging did not widen the harbor, just deepened it. The waiting list turnover rate is unpredictable, said assistant harbormaster Bill Baggs. "Sometimes quite a few [openings a year] come up, and sometimes not any," he said.

According to Winters, new moorings can't simply be dropped into the harbor. He said Coastal Zone Management has already declared Cohasset Harbor overcrowded.

A mooring can not be passed down from father to son, but can be transferred from husband to a wife, or wife to husband, just once, said Winters. If a wife transfers ownership of a mooring to her husband, and the husband remarries, the husband can't transfer the mooring to his new wife.

The list of people willing to pay the $5 a foot mooring and user fee is not limited to Cohasset residents. Those waiting must re-submit their names each year. In 1992, the waiting list was just 300 names long.

Cohasset harbor is packed with moorings for commercial and recreational boats and the waiting list keeps growing.

Mount Blue hosts benefit bash for watershed association

By Seth Jacobson
STAFF WRITER

Mount Blue is throwing a birthday bash for the North and South Rivers Watershed Association Monday night in what will likely be one of the best parties of the year.

Not only that, it will provide the watershed association, based in Norwell, with a much-appreciated financial boost.

"We're really excited about this," said Bill Stanton, executive director of the NSRWA. "Any local non-profit organization knows that Mount Blue is an established restaurant that really enjoys doing this kind of thing. It's wonderful that a local business like Mount Blue takes it upon itself to host what is always one of the major events of the year...and it's always for a great cause."

The fourth annual Mount Blue benefit party will happen from 6-10 p.m. on Monday, July 24, and all proceeds from the event will go to the North and South Rivers Watershed Association.

Restaurant owner Patrick Bowe said he expects about 500 people to show up at this year's benefit. He added he is anticipating a great party which will offer live music, food, beer and wine. He said there will be tables set up at the event which will have various appetizers and beverages available.

Bowe said the watershed association was chosen to benefit from the party this year in light of all their local preservation efforts, but also because it's the organization's 30th anniversary.

Peter Frampton's 1976 live album, "Frampton Comes Alive!", remains the best selling live album in history

Frampton stayin' alive

Legendary rocker to play South Shore Music Circus on July 26

By Seth Jacobson
STAFF WRITER

It's been 24 years since Peter Frampton became a household name with his breakthrough live album, "Frampton Comes Alive," but his recent tour is proving his music has stood the test of time and he is indeed alive and well.

"It's been fantastic," Frampton said of the tour, which kicked off in June and will bring him to the South Shore Music Circus on Wednesday, July 26. "The biggest thing I've noticed at the shows I've been playing are the different age groups in the audience. Yes, there's the age group that I come from, but there's also a younger generation that seems to have discovered my music. It's great to know the music has kept on over the years. It's always new to new audiences."

> "I liked the music my parents hated. But I always tried to listen to as many different guitarists as possible."
> — Peter Frampton

The concerts feature some old favorites as well as some of his more obscure tunes.

"People are going to hear everything they want to hear," Frampton said, "plus a few things we're planning on slipping in. We change it up a bit each night."

Frampton said he is thrilled about coming to Massachusetts, an area he considers "beautiful." His current tour will run through the middle of October.

Frampton's legendary live album, "Frampton Comes Alive" was released in 1976 and has sold 16 million copies to date. It remains the best selling live rock album in music history.

These days, Frampton is keeping himself very involved in the music industry with several projects.

His new concert DVD called "Live In Detroit" was released in May, as was the album of the same name. Frampton said the concert film was mixed in high definition 5.1 surround sound and said when one watches the film, they'll feel like part of the audience.

"When you are sitting in your living room watching the (DVD)," Frampton said, "you've got the best seat in the house." He said the concert film is also available on VHS.

Other projects Frampton has involved himself in include the implementation of his new musical accessories company called "Framptone" which will offer musical supplies including talk boxes which were made famous by the Frampton classic "Do You Feel Like I Do?"

Frampton is also releasing a signature Gibson Les Paul guitar, and he will also have a role in the new Cameron Crowe film, "Almost Famous." Crowe directed films like "Fast Times At Ridgemont High," "Say Anything," and "Singles." Frampton also wrote two songs for the film and served as the authenticity advisor for the time period on the set, as the film takes place in 1973.

Rediscovering Summer Shortcake

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

Notwithstanding the current desultory practice of using store-bought rounds of yellow sponge cake, traditional shortcake is made with hot-from-the-oven baking powder biscuits served with lightly sweetened, very juicy fruit. A great shortcake, however, relies on an enhanced recipe for the biscuits to give them superior tooth and flavor. The question was, exactly how does one turn a simple biscuit into the foundation for one of America's great summer desserts?

For starters, I tested buttermilk versus regular milk and found, as I have with pancakes and waffles, that the former makes a substantially lighter, fuller biscuit. This is because of buttermilk's high lactic acid content, which reacts at room temperature with baking soda, creating lots of carbon dioxide and hence lift in the dough. (The buttermilk also adds a bit of extra flavor.) I also tested which type of shortening to use and settled on 5 tablespoons of butter and 2 tablespoons of Crisco to 2 cups of flour. The butter adds flavor, and the Crisco improves the texture.

The problem was, I still had nothing more than a very good baking powder biscuit. More research uncovered the use of an egg or egg yolk added to the dough. I tested the egg version and found that this indeed gives the biscuits more tooth, which helps them stand up to the fruit. Finally, I had found the secret ingredient that separates shortcake biscuits from regular breakfast biscuits. Most recipes also add sugar — 3 tablespoons picked up the flavor nicely. One can also top the biscuits with a sugar/nut mixture (an almond topping is the most common variation). Although this is not a pure shortcake, it is a delicious alternative. I also found that it was best to let the cut biscuits rest for 10 minutes before baking — this increases the rise.

As for the fruit, well, it needs sugar since the biscuits themselves have only a modest amount of sweetness, unlike a crisp, betty, or other baked fruit dessert. I find that a great deal of juice is necessary to marry the fruit with the light, fluffy biscuits, so I tested sugaring it and then leaving it out at room temperature, 45 minutes being enough time to draw out lots of juice. The fruit is then chilled.

Whipped cream is the final component of great shortcake, and I wanted to test the best methods for making it. The first test concerned the type of cream. Both heavy cream and whipping cream performed just as well but light cream, with its lower fat content, whipped up poorly. The heavy cream produced 2 1/2 cups of whipped cream; the light cream produced only 2 cups.

Now I tested when to add the sugar. I tried adding it straightaway, halfway through whipping, and then near the end. The sugar added at the beginning produced the best result; there was no grittiness to the cream. Adding the sugar in the middle produced a somewhat gritty texture, and adding it near the end was a disaster – the whipped cream was grainy. In terms of chilling the bowl and ingredients, I place both the bowl and the whisk in the refrigerator for 30 minutes before whipping the cream. This step is optional since the results with room temperature equipment are comparable unless it is a particularly hot summer day.

OLD-FASHIONED BISCUIT SHORTCAKE

My Vermont neighbors often serve strawberry, blueberry, or peach shortcake for dinner in the summer, forgoing the main course, the salad, and all side dishes. Vermonters regard this sort of behavior as indulgent, perhaps even sinful, but when the fruit is ripe and still warm from the sun, all things are possible and forgiven.

Fruit
4 cups fresh berries (strawberries, blueberries, blackberries, or raspberries)
1/4 to 1/2 cup sugar
1/2 teaspoon lemon zest, minced (optional)

Biscuits
2 cups flour
1/2 teaspoon salt
2 teaspoons baking powder
1/2 teaspoon baking soda
3 tablespoons sugar
5 tablespoons cold unsalted butter
2 tablespoons cold vegetable shortening (e.g. Crisco)
1 egg yolk
3/4 cup buttermilk
1/2 teaspoon vanilla extract

Whipped Cream
1 1/2 cups heavy cream
2 tablespoons sugar
1 teaspoon vanilla extract

1. For the fruit, mix berries, sugar, and optional lemon zest and let stand at room temperature for 45 minutes. (Start with 1/4 cup sugar, taste, and add more if necessary.) Chill. Place the bowl of an electric mixer or any metal bowl in the freezer or refrigerator along with a whisk or beaters from an electric mixer.

2. For the biscuits, heat oven to 425 degrees. Combine the flour, salt, baking powder, baking soda, and sugar in the bowl of a food processor. Process for 2 seconds to mix. Add the butter, cut into 1 tablespoon bits, and pulse 7 times for one second each. Add shortening and pulse another 6 times or until mixture looks like coarse meal (the flour should take on a slightly yellowish hue from the butter). Turn mixture into a large bowl.

3. Whisk the egg yolk into the buttermilk with a fork along with the vanilla. Gradually add the buttermilk mixture to the dough, mixing with a rubber spatula. When mixture starts to hold together, press the dough with the side of the spatula. Note that you may use a little more or less than the 3/4 cup buttermilk called for in the recipe.

5. Turn onto a floured surface and roll out dough very gently to a thickness of 1/2 inch. Use a biscuit cutter (I use a 2 1/2-inch cutter to yield six servings of two biscuits per person) to cut, and then place on a cookie sheet and bake in the preheated oven for about 10 minutes, turning sheet after 5 minutes in oven. Remove from oven.

6. For the whipped cream, whip cream with the sugar and vanilla using chilled bowl and beaters.

7. Serve the fruit with 2 biscuits per person and whipped cream. Traditionally, the biscuits are cut in half for serving but I prefer them whole, as they do not get as soggy from the fruit syrup.

Serves 6

ALMOND VARIATION

Add 1/2 teaspoon of almond extract to the buttermilk along with the vanilla. Moisten tops of cut biscuits with milk before baking and sprinkle with 1/2 cup of sliced almonds. Top with a sprinkling of sugar.

BLUEBERRY PEACH VARIATION

Use 2 cups each of blueberries and peeled, sliced peaches. Assemble fruit mixture and let sit for 1 hour before proceeding with recipe.

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

Most people are already familiar with astrological sun signs – those presumed indicators of personality and future. There are, however, much more telling influences, as anyone who has studied astrology knows.

I try to do something a little different with my astrological forecasts. I like to compare astrology with meteorology. Just as meteorologists predict the physical weather – if there will be sun or precipitation – an astrologer can forecast the mental and emotional weather ahead.

A meteorologist tells you whether to bring an umbrella or sunglasses to work. By charting the course of the heavens and the various effects of celestial spheres on the human condition, I can tell you what type of day we are likely to have and how people are likely to react. My goal is to help you be prepared for the week ahead

TUESDAY, JULY 18

At last the green light is on for new starts across the board. New is in; old is out. Go with bold, innovative ideas. Dare to be different. Initiate new activities before 1:17 p.m., when the Aquarius moon and its planetary ruler, Uranus, align. Keep an open mind on all issues; you can gain key insights. Be willing to experiment with new ideas and undergo new experiences. You can cut through obstacles and achieve breakthroughs.

WEDNESDAY, JULY 19

At 6:37 a.m. the Aquarius moon aligns with Saturn and becomes inactive. An easygoing Pisces moon takes over at 9:44 a.m. A lunar alignment to Jupiter, in effect between 3:22-6:22 p.m., warns against going to extremes, overdoing, overextending. Use common sense. On the other hand, this day is above-average across the board. It's a great day for vacationing. If you are working, you can be most productive. Go with your creative side. Follow your intuition. New starts in your business or personal life are recommended.

THURSDAY, JULY 20

A lunar alignment to Pluto can make for stormy emotional weather this morning. Fortunately, this influence passes over by 7:30 a.m., and the remainder of the day rates high. A harmonious combination of creative and practical influences bring a time when you can take steps toward making your dreams a reality. A Pisces moon generates a relaxed, mellow mood. A flowing 60-degree alignment of the sun and Saturn prompts you to make important decisions, sign contracts, launch ventures.

FRIDAY, JULY 21

Astrological blues skies and sunshine continue. The laid-back Pisces moon forms easy contacts to Mars, Saturn and the sun until 7:08 p.m., when it becomes inactive. However, a harmonious alignment of Venus and Pluto takes the spotlight. Creativity and artistic sensitivity are at an all-time high. Do something that brings beauty into your life or the life of someone today. New beginnings, particularly regarding finances or romance, are promoted. This is a time to set new goals and make long-range plans and commitments. Go for the gold. An Aries moon begins at 8:09 p.m., bringing an energy boost.

SATURDAY, JULY 22

Planetary action promises one of the most exciting weekends of the summer. Don't be a hermit. All social and sporting activities are highlighted. The sun enters Leo at 8:43 a.m., remaining there until August 22. The moon also travels in a fire sign, Aries, throughout the weekend. If you have work projects to accomplish, they will come together smoothly, and you can get them out of the way in short time. The green light remains on for new starts of all kinds.

SUNDAY, JULY 23

A lunar alignment to Uranus this morning prompts you to be more adventurous. Take a vacation from routine and responsibilities; let fun and games top your agenda today. There is a rough spot, however, in effect at 6:11 p.m., when the Aries moon aligns with Mars and becomes inactive. Cool your heels; sidestep arguments, irritability.

MONDAY, JULY 24

It may be difficult to get back to work today. The moon enters Taurus at 3:44 a.m. The last quarter phase of the moon occurs at 7:02 a.m., setting the stage for the Solar Eclipse/new moon culminating Sunday, July 30. This Taurus moon also forms a 90-degree alignment to dreamy Neptune at 1:09 p.m. You can launch ventures and make important decisions or purchases after 2:00 p.m., when the moon/Neptune influence clears out.

"It seemed like a really good time to give (the watershed association) a hand," Bowe said. "We also got a lot of positive feedback about the organization from everyone we spoke with. The watershed association believes in things all of us believe in. We all live in the area and we all love the waterfront, and we feel now is a good time to attempt to strengthen their efforts so they can help make our local resources as healthy as possible."

Stanton said the Mount Blue benefit party will help his organization with many of its programs. Stanton said he plans on partnering with a professional kayak instructor in order to provide kayaking lessons.

He said he will also use portions of the proceeds to implement more sessions on learning about local resources.

"One of our major goals as an organization is to get more people out on the river, and to get them out there safely," Stanton said. "This event will help us support what we think are bigger and better programs to get people on the river, and to understand what a great resource it is."

Bowe said there will be a number of notable live musical acts at the party as well including the group Virgil Kane, a blues band from Boston called the Joe Mack Band, and also Johnny A., who was featured at Mount Blue's recent VH-1 Bash. Bowe added there will be a cameo appearance by Cohasset guitarist John (Erskine) Riley.

"We'll be putting a large tent out in front of the restaurant," Bowe said of the event. "It will be a great time consisting of good music and a free flowing food and wine experience."

Bowe said the New England Dairy Association will be providing gourmet cheeses at the party and they will be working with the Norwell gourmet food shop called Botes. Gourmet Wine and Foods of Scituate will also be on hand. Wine companies represented at the event will include M.S. Walker, the Classic Wine Company, and the Martignetti Company.

Bowe said the price of a ticket for the event is $50 per person, and he noted tickets always go fast. He said the first people invited to the party are people on the Mount Blue mailing list, but he stressed the rest of the public is invited.

"It does sell out," Bowe said. "If people want to go they should contact either Mount Blue or the North and South Rivers Watershed Association as soon as possible."

In past years, Mount Blue has hosted benefit parties for such nonprofit organizations as the Make-A-Wish Foundation and the Doug Flutie Foundation for autism. Last year, the Mount Blue party was held on behalf of the South Shore Natural Science Center in Norwell.

"We raised about $140,000 at last year's party," Bowe said. "We're expecting this year's event to be just as successful."

For those who may be unfamiliar with the restaurant, Mount Blue opened in Norwell in 1997. The owners of the place are Patrick and Jane Bowe, and their partners include Lee Kennedy, and also Joe Perry and Steven Tyler of the band Aerosmith.

The establishment features live music four nights a week but it is also known for its innovative cuisine and its cheerful atmosphere.

For more information and to get tickets for the July 24 event, call Mount Blue at (781) 659-0050 or the watershed association at (781) 659-8168.

Legendary rocker to play South Shore Music Circus

"I got to turn everyone on the set into rock stars," Frampton quipped. "But the film is really a story about a writer."

Besides the film, Frampton is also preparing for the Aug. 6 airing of VH-1's Frampton Behind The Music episode.

Frampton is also preparing to release his first six albums for the first time ever on compact disc.

But all of Frampton's current projects are the result of all the hard work and endless touring he did throughout the past three decades.

Frampton was born in Beckenham, England, and he found himself interested in music at age seven. By the time he turned 16, Frampton was a professional musician.

His influences at the time included people like Buddy Holly and Eddie Cochran. He also liked jazz music and blues musicians like Buddy Guy.

"I liked the music my parents hated," Frampton joked. "But I always tried to listen to as many different guitarists as possible."

In 1969, Frampton was 19 years old, and it was during that year that he formed the band called Humble Pie which stayed together for five albums.

Frampton went solo in 1971 and appeared on many renown musicians' albums including George Harrison.

Between 1971-1975, Frampton released four solo albums before releasing "Frampton Comes Alive" in 1976. Shortly after the release of the album, Frampton was named Rolling Stone magazine's artist of the year.

During the first part of the 1980s, Frampton said he fell off track with his music.

"During the 70s I had no time for recuperation between tours," he said. "I had been touring since I was 16 and then when "Comes Alive" came out, my touring schedule doubled. By 1980 it had gotten to the point where I was just tired and I just had no interest in making another record. I was just fed up and I needed time off."

From 1982-1986, he did take time off to start a family and rest up from his years of relentless touring. But by 1987, he was on the road playing with David Bowie on his "Glass Spiders" tour.

After the tour, Frampton got to work on a new solo album, and by 1989, the album called "When All The Pieces Fit" was released.

Regarding the time Frampton felt he was off track he said, "We all make mistakes. No one is infallible."

The 1990s found Frampton back on track with a number of new solo projects including an album called "Frampton Comes Alive II" released in 1995.

During the 90s, Frampton even managed to make a cameo appearance on the TV show "The Simpsons."

"The people at The Simpsons called me up and asked if I wanted to be on the show," Frampton said. "I said to them 'Are you kidding? Of course I would.' That was really cool. Now I'm a part of the Simpsons alumni."

Frampton said he enjoys today's musical scene and he noted he is quite partial to bands like the Foo Fighters, The Red Hot Chili Peppers, Ben Folds Five, and Vertical Horizon. He said even though many bands seem to be expressing a lot of anger through their music these days, that is a feeling people have expressed through music for a long time.

"Humble Pie was a pretty angry band," he said. "Angst is something that sounds good in music and I feel some musicians get too refined later on."

But whether or not he feels he is too refined now, Frampton's music is something that has stood the test of time.

"I'm just very thankful," he said. "Obviously my work over the years has stuck to the wall, and I'm very pleased about that."

For tickets to the July 26 Frampton show call the South Shore Music Circus at (781) 383-9850. For more information on Frampton log onto his website at www.frampton.com.

SOUTH SHORE REAL ESTATE

Buying a home is still a good investment

Investing in stocks and bonds and 401K retirement plans are a great way to secure your long-term financial future.

But, honestly, does anything quite compare to the satisfaction that comes from buying a house, paying off the mortgage and, hopefully, realizing a nice profit some day?

The home you just fell in love with but lost to another buyer does not signal the end of the world. Another one that's equally or even more desirable in terms of price and location may yet turn up.

Indeed, many consumers seem to be feeling confident in the economy, and are anxious to make a home purchase.

Selling an existing home and buying a new one can be a challenging, but fun, experience. It's important to know what you're looking for in a new home and to keep in mind certain considerations — what are your bottom lines in terms of price, the kind of community you want to live in, the basic style of your new home, for example? Should you buy now, or wait?

Other questions the new homebuyer faces can be equally daunting, but most people who have survived the experience of home selling and buying say that keeping an open mind helps a lot.

The home you just fell in love with but lost to another buyer does not signal the end of the world. Another one that's equally or even more desirable in terms of price and location may yet turn up.

Statistics show that purchasing a home is still the great American dream. Not surprisingly, this trend, fueled by a good economy around the country, is reflected in home prices.

The Massachusetts Association of Realtors found that the statewide average selling price for detached single family homes rose an amazing 18 percent during the past 12 months, going from an average price of $225,063 in the first quarter a year ago to $266,925 in the first three months of 2000.

Those returns rival any on Wall Street, certainly.

Condominiums have similarly proven to be good investments. The statewide average selling price for condos jumped 18 percent from an average price of $139,104 in the first quarter of 1999 to $164,479 during the first three months of 2000, according to the MAR.

Luxury homes have not been left behind in this picture. In fact, the year 2000 has seen a steady increase in the sale of high-end homes and second homes everywhere in the state. Sales of upper-end homes priced at $500,000 or more rose 26 percent in the first quarter of 2000 compared to the same period a year before.

Last year, Massachusetts showed the greatest jump in home prices of any area in the country with an appreciation rate of 13 percent. Limited inventory has put upward pressure on home prices in the state, the MAR has said.

The Massachusetts Association of Realtors found that the statewide average selling price for detached single family homes rose an amazing 18 percent during the past 12 months, going from an average price of $225,063 in the first quarter a year ago to $266,925 in the first three months of 2000.

Interestingly enough, home prices in California last year showed an appreciation of slightly more than 7 percent.

National home prices steadily climbed in 1999, but not as steeply as in 1998, according to the Chicago Title Corporation.

Around the country, CTC has found that buyers are acquiring more and more expensive homes but that there appears to be a shift toward the middle of the pricing spectrum.

Nationally, the median home price for first-time buyers was $150,300 while the average home price for first-time buyers was $174,000.

IN BRIEF

Jennifer Love, Gary Trechok earn technology designation

Jennifer Love of Jack Conway & Co.'s Hingham sales office and Gary Trechok of Conway's Duxbury office recently received the Conway Computer Institute (CCI) designation, an honor they obtained after completing 36 hours of intensive coursework in using technology to better serve real estate customers.

Classes on creating mailing lists, managing client databases and using desktop publishing were taught by instructors from Massasoit Community College at Conway's in-house computer-training laboratory. Technology director Toni Manning taught courses on navigating the Internet, effectively communicating with customers by e-mail, and a special module on Conway's state-of-the-art information-management system.

After completing the requirements, Love, Trechok and other CCI designees received a $500 gift certificate to CompUSA, the computer superstore.

"Technology is so important in today's market," said Manning, adding that the CCI designation is believed to be the first of its kind to be offered by a real estate firm. "These agents have shown their commitment to education by earning this designation."

"Computers are one of the tools we need in today's economy to stay competitive," Trechok said after receiving his CCI pin and gift certificate from Manning and Conway president Richard F. Cahill. "This $500 certificate is definitely going to help me upgrade my computer system."

"It's important to be educated since many of the buyers in today's market are already computer-savvy," said Love, who lives in Hingham with her husband, Scott, and two sons, Elijah and Spencer.

Hosts are not liable for guests' actions

By Anthony Summers

Tom Berube's Fourth of July party started at noon and by 10 p.m. many friends and strangers alike had come and gone.

Who could ever have predicted that Tom's Independence Day hospitality would subject him to a lawsuit brought by one of his ungrateful guests?

The case entitled Luoni vs. Berube was granted direct appellate review by our State Supreme Court.

Background

On July 4, 1996, Thomas and Sharon Berube held an open invitation holiday party at their home at which approximately 50 guests were treated to a cookout and volley ball.

At approximately 10 p.m., some unidentified people set off a fireworks display which lasted approximately 20 minutes.

Although Dominic Luoni (plaintiff) was seated approximately 70 to 100 feet from the action, a firework fragment apparently landed in his left eye, leaving him with a permanent defect.

Anthony Summers

As might be expected from a grateful friend and guest, Luoni sued the Berubes claiming they owed him a duty to take all actions reasonably necessary to prevent unreasonable risk of harm which included a duty to exercise control over dangerous acts committed by third persons on their premises.

Discussion of law

This litigation involved the growing area of social host liability. Under the general principles of common law negligence regarding a dangerous condition on land, "a landowner must act as a reasonable person in maintaining property in a reasonably safe condition in view of all of the circumstances, including the likelihood of injury, and the burden of avoiding the risk."

It is important to note that the property owner's obligation refers to pre-existing conditions. The fireworks were not a pre-existing condition. They were in fact introduced by a third person at party time.

The courts have attached social host liability for injures to or caused by an intoxicated guest where the social host either provided or controlled the alcohol.

Decision

In this case, the Berubes (homeowners) neither supplied nor controlled the fireworks. "Their (The Berubes) status as social hosts carried with it neither the means, nor legal obligation, to supervise or prevent the discharge of the fireworks by another party." The court decided that the homeowner (Berube) had no liability in this situation.

Legal advice

Any claim by Luoni should have been brought against the guest who controlled the fireworks display. However, at this late date, there may be a statute of limitations problem.

As far as the Berubes are concerned, it is unfortunate they were not discriminatory as to who and what, they allowed into their home.

Apparently they hadn't invited and did not know the firework culprits. As Shakespeare wrote 400 years ago "unbidden guests are often most welcome when they are gone."

Perennial stars in the July sunny border

By Suzanne Mahler

A beautiful tiger swallowtail butterfly floats gracefully through the garden on a perfect afternoon in mid-July. As it approaches a bed of multicolored daylilies, it smoothly descends, selecting flowers here and there from which to sip nectar. Folding its large, distinctly marked yellow- and black-striped wings over its back, it nearly disappears as it probes the large trumpets in search of the sweet reward within. Nearby, numerous species of "fluttering flowers," as Robert Frost described these ethereal creatures, glide from flower to flower, attracted by the bold display of purple and white coneflowers, tickseed shasta daisies and false sunflowers. July is butterfly heaven in the perennial border.

Butterflies are particularly fond of composite, daisy-like flowers, and the sunny border in July offers a multitude of attractive choices. Purple coneflowers (Echinacea spp.) rank high on the list of excellent nectar sources, blooming well into the fall if their spent flowers are removed on a regular basis. Large flowerheads are held above coarse, dark green foliage. These showy daisies vary considerably from plant to plant with large central disks ranging in color from red to orange and ray florets appearing in shades of pink, purple or white which may be relatively horizontal or droop. There may even be significant variation within specific cultivars if they have been propagated from seed. Cultivars which tend to be most widely distributed in commerce include 'Magnus,' 'Bravado' and 'Bright Star' with purplish-pink flowers and 'White Swan' with white petals and orange disks. A newer introduction known as 'Kim's Kneehigh' is touted as a dwarf version reaching a height of approximately 15 inches, about half as tall as its cousins.

Grow purple coneflowers in soils which contain ample humus, thereby offering a moisture-retentive but well-drained soil. Tolerant of partially shaded locations, they flourish in full sun. As their flowering season comes to a close during the cooler months, seed heads can be left to provide winter interest and encourage chickadees, goldfinches and tufted titmice to pluck the seeds through the winter. Seeds will scatter in the process and for those who may not be conscientious weeders, offspring will appear in subsequent seasons creating colorful patches of these showy, long-blooming beauties.

The family of tickseeds (Coreopsis spp.) is comprised of a number of worthy, long-blooming perennials, many of which are irresistible to many species of butterflies. Coreopsis grandiflora cultivars form basal clumps with wiry stems and daisy-like flowers of golden yellow. A wonderful cut flower, there are numerous varieties on the market having both single and double forms. Look for Coreopsis 'Early Sunrise,' 'Flying Saucers,' or a new cultivar with variegated foliage, C. 'Tequila Sunrise,' for blooms throughout the summer. Many of these plants are short-lived and may disappear after a season or two, but their long season of bloom makes them worthy additions to the border and each seedhead is packed with dozens of flat, round, brown seeds (hence the common name of tickseed) which will pop up in future years to provide new plants. Deadhead regularly to prolong blooming.

The thread-leaved tickseeds (C. verticillata spp.) are delightful, delicate, long-lived perennials which gradually spread to form bushy, airy clumps of deep green foliage topped by charming small, daisy-like flowers from late June to frost. Coreopsis 'Moonbeam' is particularly appealing with its pale, lemon-yellow blooms. Other members of this group may prove a bit more weedy and spread more than some gardeners would like, but are easily pulled when they encroach on other perennials. All tickseeds perform best in full sun in well-drained, average to fertile soils.

Few perennials rival the daylilies (Hemerocallis spp.) for their ease of culture and their diversity of bloom size, color and form. Nearly all colors are represented in the modern daylily with the exception of true blue and pure white. Unusual patterns and blotches in contrasting colors have also been developed resulting in a fascinating assortment and range of possibilities among the thousands of colorful cultivars on the market which offer blossoms from June to frost if rebloomers like 'Stella de Oro,' 'Happy Returns,' or the new 'Rosy Returns' are interspersed with early, midseason and later-blooming varieties. Although daylilies are drought tolerant and will bloom with as little as 4 to 6 hours of filtered sunlight, they thrive when provided with copious quantities of moisture and full sun. View the splendor of daylilies during their peak bloom this month in gardens across the state. My neighbor and I welcome you to tour our national display gardens on Brookwood Road in Hanover during July or make a visit to Heritage Plantation in Sandwich. For instant gratification, plants can be selected, purchased and dug while you wait at Seawright Gardens in Carlisle or Tranquil Lake Nursery in Rehoboth. Visit Tranquil Lake Nursery Saturday, July 22, for its annual open house for a fun-filled day of activities including lectures on flower-arranging, herbs, cooking with daylilies, and the sale of perennials and herbs from a variety of vendors.

Information is current as of July 14, 2000. For information on specific mortgage programs, call the lender. Rates, points, and programs are subject to change daily and cannot be guaranteed. Points include discount fees and origination fees. Quotes = rate+total points/APR (annual percentage rate), calculated as follows: conventional 20% down and $100,000 mortgage; jumbo 20% down and $252,700 mortgage; FHA 3%–5% down and $100,000 mortgage. Most quotes are for 30-day lock-ins, but can vary. Maximum conventional loan amount is $252,700; jumbo loans are in excess of $252,700. ARM–adjustable rate mortgage. ARM rates are quoted as follows: rate +total points/APR (type of ARM program is listed in parentheses). LTV–loan to value. MI–mortgage insurance. NA–not available. NQ–rates not quoted. Lenders, to be listed in this paid advertised column, call 480-905-8000 or 1-800-CNS-8525. Mortgage rates and programs are updated online daily. Use senior coupon discount booklets

By George Hobica
COPLEY NEWS SERVICE

Q. Last October, we bought two tickets on America West from San Diego to Denver by calling the airline's toll-free number. We told the agent that we were senior citizens and were flexible, although we wanted to visit over the Thanksgiving holiday. The reservation agent quoted a fare of $236.50. When we received the tickets, however, the price was $436.50 each.

Unable to resolve this discrepancy, I tried to get a refund on the tickets, but was told they were nonrefundable. I think that the Department of Transportation should forbid airlines to sell nonrefundable tickets. I know of no other business that's allowed to sell a product with a no-refund policy.

Second, I know that if I had bought this ticket through a travel agent and the price had been boosted $200, I would have refused to accept it. We all need to write our lawmakers to push for better passenger rights.

A. I could write a book about this one. Where to start?

First of all, since you're senior citizens, and assuming you would travel again within one year, you should have used senior coupon discount booklets ($548 for four one-way flights, or $274 RT anywhere America West flies). A good travel agent would have steered you in that direction.

Which brings me to the second point: Although you can often get great Web-only fares on the airlines' Web sites, in this case, you should have used a travel agent, because they're easier to deal with if there's a problem like this, and the problem probably wouldn't have arisen in the first place. Why are people so resistant to using them these days? I don't get it.

Third, as you imply, $436 from San Diego to Denver is outrageously high. As I write this, Delta is offering that route for a mere $122 RT (you can find low "strategic" fares like this at www.digitalcity.com/travelguy), and I often see it for $250 or so.

Fourth, if you deal with an airline reservation agent on the phone, always get their name. Unfortunately, it's only your word against theirs that they quoted you a lower fare unless you've recorded the conversation, which is legal if you tell them you're doing so (after all, airlines sometimes record conversations for "quality assurance purposes," so it can work both ways).

You can still apply the value of your tickets to future travel on America West minus a $75 fee, or transfer the value to one of your children minus the same fee. But getting a full refund would be difficult at this point.

Q. Several months ago, I read an article about agencies that rent furnished short-term apartments in New York City, including Urban Ventures. We rented an apartment on 14th Street in Manhattan through them and found it in very poor condition. The price was reasonable, but the apartment was a mess and lacked some basic amenities like closet space and towels.

A friend of ours rented an apartment in New York City though TBJ Inc. and was very satisfied.

A. There are many companies that rent short-term apartments in New York. Urban Ventures, (212) 594-5650, or www.nycurbanventures.com, is one of the pioneers in this industry.

A Hospitality Company, a division of TBJ Inc. (www.hospitality-company.com, or 1-800-987-1235), is another, with rates as low as $99 per night. A one-bedroom on 49th Street in a doorman building would cost more like $175 a night.

It doesn't sound from your letter that you complained to Urban Ventures about the condition of the apartment while you were staying there, which is the first step in resolving a situation like this.

Next time, if you don't need a kitchen, keep in mind that during certain times of the year, such as weekends in summer, you can do as well or better just staying in a hotel room where you'll get full service

For example, the new ultraluxury Regent Wall Street at 55 Wall St., (212) 845-8610, is offering rooms over the weekend this summer for $200 a night, and the Malibu Hotel, (800) 647-2227, on the Upper West Side offers clean if simple rooms for as low as $69 at times.

Q. Several weeks ago, we bought two round-trip tickets to Colorado Springs through OneTravel.com. We spent two evenings searching many sites until we found the right itinerary and price. The price was $260 per ticket, and the printout we examined also clearly stated that this included taxes. The moment we completed the order, the actual price jumped to $325.

We expressed our surprise and disappointment via their customer service screen, which guaranteed a response within 24 hours. We still have not received a reply or explanation and are tempted to refuse credit card payment. Do we have any recourse? We will certainly never order online again.

A. Booking online can be confusing. The fact remains, however, that airlines reserve their best fares for Internet-only bookings, so buying directly from an airline-owned Web site is often your best bet to save money (for example, United and Delta are currently offering Boston-Los Angeles for $288 RT on their sites, whereas if you looked on expedia.com, travelocity.com, or onetravel.com, the regular fare might be $360 or more). In your case, there was a computer glitch.

"This certainly was a confusing problem," a OneTravel spokesperson admits. "(Our new computer system) displayed the correct fare at the time of booking and the correct fare was charged to the customer's credit card. The only time the fare was displayed incorrectly was on the confirmation page."

So, you should find the correct amount when you get your credit card statement.

PROGRAM OF EVENTS

133rd ANNUAL

MARSHFIELD FAIR

August 18-27, 2000

133rd Marshfield Fair Opens August 18th

Entering the new millennium, the Marshfield Fair continues its primary mission of education and enlightening our guests about agriculture and horticulture. At the same time we are pleased to entertain our visitors with a wide variety of fun and exciting things to do and see while at the Fair.

The Officers, Directors and Members of the Marshfield Agricultural & Horticultural Society, operators of the annual Marshfield Fair, invite the public to join in the celebration of the 133rd Marshfield Fair.

The year 2000 Marshfield Fair starts on Friday, August 18th and runs for ten exciting days through Sunday, August 27th. Gates open at Noon on Monday through Friday, and at 10 am on Saturdays and Sundays.

Chartered in 1867 by the Massachusetts General Court, the Marshfield Agricultural & Horticultural Society is a non-profit organization with about 100 members, 17 Directors, a Management Committee, and four officers. Although members and directors come mostly from Marshfield other communities include Plympton, Whitman, Braintree, Plymouth, Duxbury, Scituate, Hull, Pembroke and Foxboro. The Society owns the Fairgrounds off Main Street (Route 3A) and South River Street.

For the 133rd Annual Marshfield Fair the same combination of agriculture, horticulture, entertainment and good fair food is the formula used by the Society in its first fair.

Agricultural and Horticultural competitions, displays and exhibits include: 4-H, Open Poultry Shows, Open Rabbit Shows, Ox Pulls, Draft Horse Demonstrations, Multi-Horse Hitch Demonstrations, Two Giant Pumpkin Contests (Local and New England), Garden Displays, Flowers, Vegetables, farm equipment vendors and two horse shows. The 4-H activities include Beef and Dairy Cattle, Sheep, Hogs, Goats and Rabbits.

Entertainment for the year 2000, has two Music Festivals (Blues and R&B), two Oldies Shows (afternoon and evening of Saturday, August 19th), four evenings of Demolition Derby action (three of traditional Demolition Derby and one of Figure-8 Racing), two days of the Toyota Hollywood Stunt Show with Tim Chitwood, Herb Reed and the Platters performing in the afternoon and evening on Senior Citizen's Day, Motor Cross action at the grandstand, Gifford & Roy magicians, Lou Cerel the Balloon Magician, Rick and Randy Boni the Masters of the Chainsaw, and much more. In addition, Fiesta Shows family Midway will provide thrilling rides and midway games for our fair visitors.

But that's not all—the Fair also has an expanding Arts and Crafts competition and exhibits. Using a combination of the first floor of the Agricultural Hall (under the Grandstand) and an Activity Tent quilts, photography, paintings, clothing, needlework and other crafts are on display daily. In addition, the Arts and Crafts Department also hosts baking contests, door decorating competition and special youth activities.

Food on the fairgrounds ranges from hot dogs and burgers to full meals. Ever since the first Marshfield Fair, food has been available, to meet just about every taste. In addition the Fair has a Farmer's Market, where fresh produce can be purchased and taken home.

As Fair guests enter the 133rd Marshfield Fair, they will receive a great value for the small admission charge. They may choose to be entertained by "The Olympics", "Johnny Preston", "The Demolition Derby", "Herb Reed and the Platters", "Toyota's Hollywood Stunt Show" or the Fiesta Shows Midway. They may visit the 4-H area, Poultry Show, Rabbit Building, or one of the many Public Service Exhibits in our two exhibitions buildings near the 4-H Ring. There is much to see and the Fair has something for visitors of all ages.

Sullivan Tire is once again the sponsor for Senior Citizen Day, Tuesday, August 22nd (when seniors 65 and older are admitted free with Senior ID). Wendy's International is the sponsor of Children's Day, Wednesday, August 23rd (youngsters 12 and under are admitted to the Fair free on that day). Many area businesses are involved in sponsorships throughout the Fair.

The Marshfield Fair is located on Main Street, Route 3A, at South River Street in Marshfield, not far from Route 3 and 139. For additional information and advance discount ticket details, call (781) 834-6629, or e-mail the Fair at tickets@marshfieldfair.org. The Fair has an up to date listing on activities on its Internet web page at www.marshfieldfair.org.

Marshfield Fair Salutes Volunteer '2000'!

By Sharon Martin Krawczyk

Veronica "Roni" Bache Lahage is a lot of name for this attractive five foot three energetic volunteer. But after a few minutes in her company, you could easily understand why she was chosen as this year's honoree.

Roni grew up with her hands in the dirt. Her Dad had a garden and encouraged all of his daughters, five in all, to plant. "We mostly grew vegetables" she quoted. "I really loved being outside and I think we realized the importance of feeding a big family and being self-sufficient".

When Roni moved with her first son and husband from Ashland to Marshfield in '92', she immediately set out to establish roots. She planted gardens, all kinds, all organic. Today, her home is a showplace reflecting her patience and hard work. A few years later in '96, she had noticed Agricultural contests featured at the Marshfield Fair and decided to enter some of her flowers and vegetables. She was thrilled to receive a couple of ribbons and be part of the friendly competition. She met some fellow gardeners and was asked by one of the Fair Directors if she might be interested in volunteering. They asked if she would be able to come and water plants a couple of days during the ten-day Fair. She agreed and that would sound like the rest is history. Not so. This gal is about making history happen. Watering plants for her was like watering seeds for the future.

A year later, Roni and others, started the Y'ise Gardeners, a YMCA Garden Group. Roni encouraged others to join with her at the Fair. Soon, the gardeners group made the Marshfield Fair part of their Club Committees. Ten or so members are responsible for a garden display, which is created every year. Roni along with her team, is working hard to raise the level of Horticultural interest on a larger scale. This year they introduced the Standard Flower Show at the Fair. Standard Flower Shows are what you see at the New England Flower Show and is sanctioned by the Garden Club Federation of Mass., a state organization for Garden Clubs. In addition to the Standard Flower Show, the Volunteers are reaching out to the community to get Garden Clubs, Florists and Nurseries to exhibit their work based around their own specialities of horticultural features. Entries have already been received by Bonsai West in Pembroke, Arla's Floral Boutique of Pembroke, Manhasset Gardens of Kingston and of course, Kennedy's Country Gardens, which has been displaying at the Fair for many, many years.

Veronica 'Roni" Bache Lahage brings creative beauty to the Marshfield Fair and we salute her hard work and dedication.

Roni lives in Marshfield with husband Dan and two boys, Malcolm and Nick.

If you would like to know more about the Volunteer Program at the Marshfield Fair, please call 781-834-6629.

30 Years at the Marshfield Fair

Eugene Dean

Jim Flynn

When you hear the name "Dean & Flynn", your mind conjures up a law firm perhaps, a sausage company or a famous comedian act. The latter would probably meet with your approval if you were in the company of the Flynn part of this unlikely partnership.

In 1935, Eugene Dean and Jack Flynn teamed up in the amusement business in Salisbury Beach, Massachusetts. It is really hard to envision such a feat, when the country was in the throws of a major depression. Salisbury Beach was a place for families to go and enjoy wholesome fun, especially during the summer—so I guess these men just wanted to bring something fun to families. They combined their talents and business acumen and indeed set out to create family entertainment with the emphasis on quality and the importance of fair play.

In 1967, Dean & Flynn purchased the "Fiesta Shows", but when Jack Flynn died in 1969, it was a shock to the duo and impacted on the families involved. Eugene dean turned to Jack's brother, Jimmy, and asked him if he would join the team and fill in for his late brother. Jimmy was reluctant, but "family comes first" he said, and he joined Fiesta. When Eugene Sr. passed on, his son, Gene took over for his father and the name Dean & Flynn continued on.

The phenomenal growth that the Fiesta Shows has enjoyed over the past 30 years can only be termed remarkable. Today, they are the largest Massachusetts based carnival in the business and one of the largest in the entire Northeast. Featuring the safest and most modern rides available, they can erect over sixty rides they own at city parks, athletic fields and many State Fairgrounds. These rides are complemented with game concessions and food operations and their distinguished history only confirmed the desire of organizations and foregoers everywhere to have them back year after year. When the elder Dean and Flynn first set out to offer entertainment, they considered their own families first and took the same basic idea and extended it to families everywhere.

In 1950, the two elder showmen signed a contract with the Topsfield Fair, which is still in effect today. Fiesta Shows has also enjoyed a 30 year relationship with the Marshfield Fair.

You may be one of the lucky ones to have caught a glimpse of either to these two unlikely partners. Gene Dean is the quiet, behind the scenes guy, dressed in work clothes and busy working on something or answering the phone. Jimmy, on the other hand, looks part Irish dapper and part leprechaun. Whatever their look is, they have their act together. No doubt about it!

Congratulations, Fiesta Shows!!

Information for this article was provided from the history library of Fiesta Shows and personal data from the writer. Fiesta Shows Midway will be featured at the 133rd Annual Marshfield Fair. Contact the Fair at 781-834-6629 for advanced ticket rides.

Chainsaw Master Takes Carving to the Extreme

In a world where notable art seems to require more money and hype than ingenuity and skill, Randy Boni's work comes a breath of fresh air. There seems to be an intriguing paradox however, between the simple purity of Randy's work and the powerful speed and incredible danger at which it is performed.

Randy Boni is no ordinary wood sculptor and his tools are nothing short of extraordinary. His works of art are actually performed with a chainsaw. With chain whirring and chips flying his precision and speed will hold his audience captive as he releases from an ordinary log, a beautifully detailed carving of a bear, eagle, Indian, or whatever his imagination can conjure up. Imagine a three foot-tall figure carved within 45 minutes, using nothing but a chainsaw. This is a truly incredible spectacle that draws hundreds of spectators to any given show. In fact, chainsaw artists are fast becoming the most popular act on fairgrounds and at festivals across the country.

Randy started carving nine years ago. He met a chainsaw artist and was so intrigued with the unusual art form he immediately bought a chainsaw and began his career. Several weeks later, an 18-foot totem graced his yard. It is one of the few carvings he has allowed himself to keep. Randy is not alone in his carving world for shortly after he started carving, his brother Rick, a college art major, joined him in his efforts. Both are now full time carvers that travel the country entertaining crowds of curious onlookers. If he is not booked, Rick may even show up to help his brother with a little carving or perhaps just to critique a bit. There is actually little or no sibling rivalry here, constructive criticism and their mutual desire to progress are believed to be factors in the brothers quick rise in the chainsaw world. Working so well together, they are often hired as a team. It is believed they are the only identical twin chainsaw sculptors in the country.

The Marshfield Music and Arts Festival

by Sharon Martin Krawczyk

Now in its 5th year, the Marshfield Fair looks back at what has now become one of its main attractions. The North River Blues Festival and the Green Harbor Rhythm and Blues Festival. Each event takes place on consecutive Sundays, August 20th and 27th respectively.

The idea was the brainchild of John Hall, owner of Rhythm Room Records in Marshfield Center. John's interest in music started at age 13, when he attended his first live music show. He has been hooked ever since. Janet Tipton, who hails from Martha's Vineyard saw many groups play over the summers and with her work in the hospitality field, she was a natural to manage his store. John was a music director on WATD 95.9 for many years where he introduced blues, jazz and singer-songwriter programming. His passion is classic rock and blues. John is also active with the Boston Blues Society as a Special Event Director and has been a past Board Member.

Coco Montoya

His love for music was the driving force behind the proposal to the Fair in 1996 and his knowledge and networking were what impressed the directors at that time. John recognized that this area was blessed with many talented and exceptional Blues Bands. The Fair had some concerns that first year, but they saw the potential and they liked the idea of promoting area musicians, who would have local following, too. This certainly proved to be a wise move on their part. The first year, The Festival featured a local artist, Susan Tedeschi. At that time, Susan had represented Boston in the National Blues Competition in Memphis, TN, and took a second place. She will be a headliner this summer at Fleet Boston Pavilion.

John asked for nothing for himself to create and promote this event at the Fair. He just wanted his store to be the sole sponsor. He has other vendors who generously give time and/or equipment: Bluestone Entertainment, The Boston Blues Society, Music Unlimited of Kingston and Hanover, Green Harbor General Store, Rick's Deli, Horizons at the Ramada Inn and Sabian Cymbals.

"It's a win, win situation"; said John. "You can hear the best bands around at one location on a summer's day for the price of $7.00 (General Admission) and the whole family gets to enjoy a Fair, too."

Rhythm Records is a store for serious music shoppers, with over 100,000 items for sale at competitive prices. They ship anywhere in the world.

This year's line up for the two Sundays is listed in the program. For further information, please call The Marshfield Fair at 781-834-6629. The dates for the entire ten day fair is August 18-27. Admission is $7.00 Adult, $4.00 Children 6-12, Children 5 and under are admitted free and

Director Profile: Ray McKay

by Sharon Krawczyk

Ray McKay has been a Director at the Marshfield Fair for fifteen years. His specialty is agriculture and his passion is to see the interest in agriculture continue to grow for future generations. "Farming is tougher than ever, especially in New England" quoted Ray. The Fair is a great place to come and experience the old traditions. I would like to see more agricultural exhibits and it would be great if more local people were involved".

Ray first got involved in the Fair in 1949, when he exhibited his Guernsey Cows and took a Second Place. A few years later in 1952, he was smitten by another exhibitor at the Fair, who was showing sheep. A romance ensued and the two were married in 1958.

The couple settled in Foxborough at the family farm, which had been passed down to Ray from his Dad. Ray and his wife not only kept a farm going, raising three daughters, but they both had teaching jobs at the Middle School in Foxborough. Ray retired last year and his wife retired this year.

Writers Note: Ray and his wife's farm is called "Sunlight Farm", which is so appropriately named. I know at the Fair, this quiet, gentle giant, sheds a "Ray of sunshine" on all the people he comes in contact with. Congratulations on being our Director of the Year!

Demolition Derby and Introducing Figure-8 Racing

J.M. Productions, producers of the "World's Largest Demolition Derby" returns to the Fair in front of the Grandstand with three evenings of traditional Demolition Derby action at 7 pm on Friday, August 18, Monday, August 21 and Friday, August 25.

In addition, at 7 pm on Thursday, August 24, J.M. Productions will present Marshfield Fair's First Championship Figure-8 Racing, a different twist on Demolition Derby action.

A few years ago, J.M. Productions developed the Figure-8 form of Demolition derby by using compact cars to enhance excitement for both drivers and spectators alike. This form of Figure-8, unlike other forms of Demo Derby, is in front of the Grandstand on a 150-foot by 60-foot racetrack.

Because of its challenge, drivers all over are switching to Figure-8 racing. With strict guidelines and rules, and the help of drivers, this type of Demo Derby is fun and fair for all.

Drivers interested in taking part in the traditional or Figure-8 Demo Derby should contact the Fair at 781-834-6629.

Lon Cerel

Lon Cerel is a keen combination of performer, comedian, and magician—the total entertainer. He has been working audiences with skill, wit and a love of his craft for more than 20 years. Lon is a regularly featured "traffic building" performer at comedy clubs, shopping malls, conventions and fairs.

A Lon Cerel performance percolates with energy, punctuated by unexpected bursts of contagious laughter. Lon tailors his show to the audience. On stage, Lon combines outrageous humor, Houdini-like escapes, and mind boggling demonstrations of Extra Sensory Deception. Lon performs in a walk-around fashion, sculpting balloon creatures. His wacky talent delights, amazes, confounds and leaves you breathless.

Lon Cerel splits you with laughter, demonstrates the impossible, and most of all fills you with a sense of lasting wonder.

Toyota's Hollywood Stunt Show to Perform Three Shows

Charles R. Belknap is bringing his Toyota Hollywood Stunt Show back to the Marshfield Fair on Saturday and Sunday, August 26th and 27th.

Awe-inspiring new stunts from current award-winning motion picture and television shows will be performed under the direction of legendary stuntmen Tonny Petersen and Tim Chitwood.

Chitwood, the son of racing great and thrill show impresarios Joie Chitwood, Sr., brings over 30 years' worth of stunt experienced to this all new show.

The all white, Hollywood Thunder, will be a feature of the show. Its jet engine will light up the sky and shake the earth with its 60000 horsepower demonstration.

This non-stop motorized menu served up by the Hollywood Stunt Show also includes motorcycles flying by the audience in midair and an amazing hold your breath display of a Toyota Camry and an all-new Toyota Tundra skillfully driven on only two wheels.

The Toyota Hollywood Stunt show will take place in front of the Marshfield Fair's Grandstand at 7:30 pm on Saturday August 26th and a 2 pm and 7 pm on Sunday, August 27th.

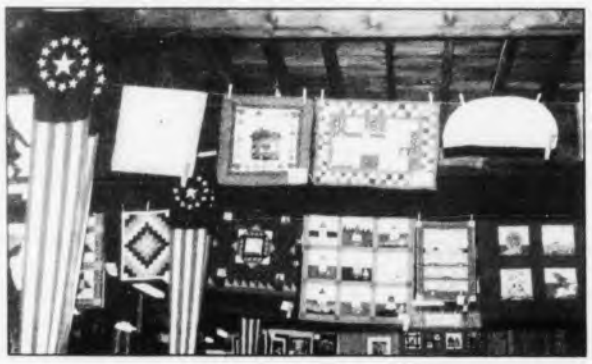
Quilt Winners Announced

Every year the Fair features the "Peggy Beals Quilt Block Contest". A theme is established in advance and each entrant creates her or his special block.

This year's theme was favorite star pattern, sashed in rose. The numbers appearing after name indicates the amount of times an individual has won in the past. The winners of this year's Peggy Beals Quilt Block Contest are:



First Prize: Helen Bendell, Brockton, MA. Other winners: Lynn Anastos (9), Hull, MA; Sheila Barnes (2), Prescott, WI; Doris Carroll (1), Marshfield, MA; Barbara Coyne, Duxbury, MA; Jean Dodson (4), Arlington, TX; Joyce Duff, Delta Junction, Alaska; Mandy Fariello, Duxbury, MA; Zelda Ziegler Garner, Pocatello, ID; Cynthia Herrera (2), Pitman, NJ; Helen Hobbs, Marshfield, MA; Barbara Jackson, Scituate, MA; Helen Lovoie (2), Sandwich, MA; Priscilla McGilvray (1), Marshfield, MA; Edna McLeod, Weymouth, MA; Christine Moriarty, Quincy, MA; Thelma Nuttall (5), Taunton, MA; Beverly Payne, Marshfield, MA; Maureen Shea (2), West Barnstable, MA; Helen Slusarz (3), Dighton, MA.

Winning blocks for all quilt winners will be displayed in the Agricultural Hall at the Fair. During the ten days of the Fair, you will have a chance to own the winning quilt, by purchasing a raffle. Techniques on making quilts will be displayed by the many volunteers who work diligently on this event each year.

Each non-winning block entered in the Peggy Beals Quilt Contest will be made into quilts for charity. Proceeds of the "Favorite Star Pattern" quilt are used to raise exhibition prize money. Materials for the sashing, batting and backing for this quilt were graciously donated by the Tumbleweed Quilt Shop in Pembroke, MA and Braidaid of Pembroke donated a $25 gift certificate for the "Best of Show Award". The theme for next year's Peggy Beals Quilt contest will be "your Favorite Quilting Pattern."

For further information, please contact Lorraine Lawn or Muriel Chapman by writing to the Marshfield Fair, PO Box 5, Marshfield, MA 02050 or call 781-834-6629.

Prize winning pumpkin by James Kuhn of Goffstown, NH (650 pounds)

The following are the rules to follow: your piece should measure 12½ inches, which allows ½ inch for seam allowance all around. The fabric must be washable and preferably 100% cotton. Important: do not back or quilt your block. You can enter as many pieces as you wish (only one can win). You must attach your name and address to the back of your block with a safety pin.

Mary Jean Balliro, Malden, MA; Jessica Jacobs, St. Charles, IA; Lindsay Jacobs, St. Charles, IA; Kerri Mellon, Marshfield, MA; Michelle Nee, Marshfield, MA; Stephanie Nee, Marshfield, MA; Anne Obin, Weymouth, MA; Heather Obin, Weymouth, MA; Elizabeth O'Brien, Dorchester, MA; Chantelle Rockey, Truro, IA; Jake Rockey, Truro, IA; Kayla Zaremski, Dorchester, MA.

Farmer's Market

Shaw's Supermarkets will once again be featured at the Marshfield Fair Farmer's Market, under the grandstand. Johnny Preston

Johnny Preston has an impressive place in the history of Rock and Roll. His hits include the chart topping Running Bear, Cradle of Love, Feel So Fine, Leave My Kitten Alone, and many others.

Johnny was discovered by J.P. Richardson, "The Big Bopper." "The Bopper" wrote Running Bear and had Johnny record the song for Mercury Records.

Mercury Records was about to release the record when the world was shocked by the death of The Big Bopper, Buddy Holly and Richie Valens. Mercury decided to delay the release of the single until months later. It hit the charts in October 1959, and shot all the way to number one, where it stayed for three weeks. It sold three million copies!

After three more top five hits in 1960, Johnny was voted "most promising" Pop Male Vocalist that year by Cash Box Magazine and The Music Operators of America.

Johnny Preston is still singing Great Rock and Roll music all over the U.S. And Europe. He will be appearing at the Fair on August 19th.

Herb Reed and the Platters

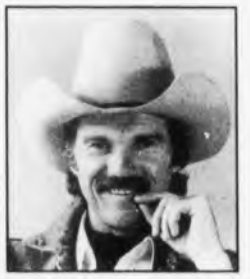
Herb Reed organized the original Platters and sang on all their recordings, just to name a few: Only You, The Great Pretender, My Prayer, Smoke Gets in Your Eyes, The Magic Touch, Harbor Lights and many more.

Herb Reed and the Platters have sold over 80 million records. Herb Reed and the Platters have sung in 91 countries and have received over 230 awards from all over the world. Of all the awards he has received, there is one he cherished above all. While on tour in Italy, he and the Platters had an audience with his Holiness the Pope, and were given a medal from the Pope, for charitable concerts throughout Italy.

Herb Reed and the Platters have made 27 movies, some you may remember, such as Rock Around the clock, The Girls Can't Help It, Europe by Night, Girls Town, with Paul Anka, Carnival Rock and 22 more in Mexico, Spain Japan, Paris, Italy and Israel. Since he organized the Platters, he has never stopped selling out throughout all these years and he still sells out wherever he goes. He is a happy man and I'm sure you can guess why.

John Lincoln Wright

He is known throughout the music world as one of the most accomplished and sensitive songwriters in the business—and one of the finest singers. As rock performer (with the Beacon Street Union in the '60s) and country singer (with the Sourmash Boys) he has performed with a long list of international celebrities, from Jimi Hendrix, the Who, The Mothers, the J. Geils Band, and Janis Joplin to country legends Willie Nelson, Waylon Jennings, Merle Haggard, Emmylou Harris, and Dolly Parton. His name is a household word to country fans in New England, where he regularly leads polls of favorites and collects awards—including the prestigious Boston Music Award for Outstanding Country Act.



That Old Mill is John Lincoln Wright's debut acoustic album, a personal statement lovingly crafted over several years. The focus is on old Maine, on the vanishing mill-town way of life, with its dedication to work and family, and its love-hate relationship with the mills that demanded so much and gave back so little. But That Old Mill is also a joyful reaffirmation of the beauty of the ancient northern land, of the Indian heritage that left only names and memories, and of the simple love that refreshes the lives of ordinary people.

Whether at a festival, a concert, or the intimacy of a coffeehouse; from traditional country music fans or the tough alternative music audience of the clubs, John Lincoln connects with his audience with soul and grit. In both acoustic or electric formats, he understands the music, and his audience understands him. See John Lincoln Wright perform live at the Marshfield Fair on August 26th at 4 pm.

The Olympics

A dynamic and exciting group, THE OLYMPICS blasted on the scene in the late '50's with their million-dollar seller, Western Movies. They recorded several other top tunes including Big Boy Pete, Good Lovin and their huge hit, Hully Gully started a national dance craze.

This internationally known group has appeared on American Bandstand, and have performed with legendary artists such as Little Richard, Chubby Checker, Tina Turner and the late Wolfman Jack.

Walter Ward and Eddie Lewis are original members. Kenneth Sinclair and William DeVase have been with them for more than 20 years.

Their music is still heard all over the world. The Olympics continue to dazzle audiences across the country with their high-energy act.

Look for the Olympics at the Marshfield Fair on August 19th.

AUGUST 18-27, 2000

THE PIXIES THREE

Fans of the ever-popular "Girl Group Sound" of the 1960's are applauding the triumphant return of one of the most beloved female singing trios of the era, the original Pixies Three!

Between 1963-65, The Pixies Three (Debbie Horn, Kaye Krebs and Bonnie Walker) commanded the local and national charts with five pop smashes. Their first Mercury records release, "Birthday Party" rocketed to #40 on the Billboard charts in August 1963. The string of hits continued with such memorable classics as "Cold, Cold Winter", "Gee", "It's Summertime USA" and their biggest chart-topper, "442 Glenwood Avenue." Their hit singles were followed by a successful album, entitled "Party with the Pixies Three."

What set these three Hanover, Pennsylvania natives miles above the competition was their captivating innocence, irresistible charm and most importantly, their astounding three-part harmonies. In their heyday, The Pixies performed with such notables as The Four Seasons, Dionne Warwick, The Dave Clark Five and even The Rolling Stones. The Pixies Three remained one of the top teen favorites until they went their separate ways in 1965.

After nearly twenty-five years apart, Debbie, Kaye and Bonnie were asked to reunite for a performance at their high school reunion in 1991. Word spread quickly about The Pixies reunion, and offers for more shows began to pour in. And as they say, "The Rest Is History".

Today, The Pixies sound better than ever, and still possess the same unique charm and sublime harmonies which became their trademark over thirty years ago.

The Pixies will be appearing at the Fair on August 19th.

Susan E and Bluesliner will be performing on August 20th.

Cohasset Revitalization Corporation opens public showroom

Neil Glick of Spring Street reviews written comments made by visitors to the Cohasset Revitalization Corporation's open house with project architect David O'Connor of the Cecil Group.

Group seeks to revitalize village

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

"Cautious optimism" — that's the term used by Dean Rizzo, the executive director of the newly formed Cohasset Revitalization Corporation, to describe residents' reaction to CRC's plans to renovate and improve the village and harbor areas.

CRC is a private non-profit organization created to spearhead the proposed Cohasset Village renewal project, as well as look into renovating the harbor area. Rizzo, who is the former chairman of the Cohasset Revitalization Task Force, a town committee, recently left his job at the South Shore Chamber of Commerce and resigned as the task force's chairman to join CRC.

Rizzo said the purpose of the group is to act as a catalyst in the planning and design phase of the project. "There's only so much a part-time committee can do," he said, about the village task force.

The incorporation of the CRC, backed by Kimball's and Atlantica owner Peter Roy, and Red Lion Inn owner Gerde Ordelheide, has met with mixed reviews. Some believe the CRC will prove to be the much-needed spur in improving the old seaside town, but others think it's just a front for wealthy businessmen to control the future look of Cohasset.

Robert M. Davenport, a Black Horse Lane resident, said the need for a corporation overseeing the project, is wrong for two reasons. "One, [village revitalization] is unneeded. Two, it is two large business interests, in effect, trying to call the shots in terms of the way the town should be and look."

He said though Cohasset Village, which runs from the Town Common to the cove, could use things such as granite curbing to keep cars off sidewalks, he believes the project should be overseen by the town's citizens, such as when the Village Renaissance Committee installed a water pump in front of Cohasset Hardware "The selectmen, working with the town manager, can tend to things like that, and not require consultants to perform a big study," he said. "The collection of businesses over the years has changed, but it's a unique collection that run them and have done an excellent job bringing good businesses to Cohasset Village.

"I don't see a need for some kind of master plan from two very large business interests," he said.

Davenport also doesn't see the need for an official "Harbor Walk."

"I walk down by the harbor every day. You can walk around the harbor very easily. I don't see a need or a problem down there. There is a stretch that is hard to navigate between the Hagerty property and Government Island, but the improvements to the Hagerty property should take care of that," he said.

Ham Tewksbury, an Elm Street resident, is also opposed to the CRC. "I have no doubt there are certain improvements we could make throughout the village and the town, but I don't feel this is the approach to take to do it."

He also is afraid the corporation would make the village into a stereotypical seaside tourist trap. "I have this feeling that there is a great want to Nantucket-ize the town of Cohasset; make it something it isn't, something it isn't supposed to be."

Organization's structure, objectives are outlined

The opening of the Cohasset Revitalization Corporation's harbor-front office on Elm Street should help shed light on the purpose of the private, non-profit organization being backed by two of Cohasset's wealthiest businessmen.

Atlantica and Kimball's owner Peter Roy, and Red Lion Inn owner Gerd Ordeleide formed a partnership to spearhead the design phase of the proposed Cohasset Village revitalization project, as well as look into the feasibility of creating a formal harbor walk around Cohasset Harbor.

Dean Rizzo, a former employee of the South Shore Chamber of Commerce and chairman of the town's Cohasset Village Revitalization Task Force, is the organizatioq's executive director. CRC held a special preview of the office July 19, with an official open house for the public scheduled for Aug. 10.

Cohasset and Scituate on same track

Towns hire consultant

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Cohasset and Scituate selectmen have agreed to form an informal partnership in their dealings with the MBTA about Greenbush, in an attempt to force the state to pay more attention to the towns regarding mitigation for the train.

At Tuesday's meeting, Cohasset selectmen voted to split the cost of a consultant for the Section 106 Army Corps of Engineer hearings, and also to co-sign a letter to state Senator Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, requesting a meeting with Gov. Paul Cellucci. The two towns are also researching any possible legal avenues they may have to gain leverage during negotiations with the MBTA.

Selectmen from both towns have expressed their displeasure and frustration with the MBTA and state Transportation Secretary Kevin Sullivan, and hope their combined efforts will force the state to deal with the two towns fairly. The MBTA told the towns last month that mitigation negotiations have been put on hold until the completion of the Section 106 hearings.

The Bard meets Bernstein

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

If Ron Nicynski says it will be a good show, you probably should take him at his word, for two reasons. First, to be offered the director's chair of a full-scale musical production at the age of 19, some talent has to be present. Second, he was given his first directing job based on a guarantee that it would be the called the best production of that play in the area – and he was right.

Nicynski, four years removed from his "Wizard of Oz" debut/guarantee, is now leading the Cohasset Plays by the Sea Musical Theatre Workshop, which will present "Shakespeare's West Side Story."

Selectmen's office

The wall is down, and furniture has been rearranged in the selectmen's office at Town Hall. At the board's July 11 meeting, Town Manager Mark Haddad informed the board that the wall in the office would come down and be replaced by a sliding wall, in an effort to create more meeting space. Work commenced last weekend, with the removal of the non-load bearing wall. A new carpet and coat of paint for the walls is still to come. All renovation costs are being paid for by MediaOne.

Haddad complimented the town's maintenance staff, including foreman Joe Cochran, Derek Lynch, Ken Sergeant and DPW Supt. Harold Litchfield, saying they have done a "phenomenal job."

Financial report

According to preliminary financial reports, Cohasset's FY-2000 surplus may be bigger than expected. "It is very positive," said Town Manager Mark Haddad in his report to selectmen. He credited three specific areas with taking in much greater than expected revenues. According to the report, excise tax collections were budgeted at $790,293, but instead the town collected $1,031,841. The town also collected $171,173 in building permit fees, more than $125,000 than the amount budgeted. The town's investments also did well, bringing the town an extra $42,000.

Haddad said the numbers should be certified later this summer, and the surplus transferred to free cash.

Town counsel

By a 2-1 margin, selectmen voted to give town counsel Paul DeRensis his requested hourly raise to $150 an hour, but deferred increasing the retainer fee until January.

The requested raise in fees was a hot issue at the board's last meeting, and prompted a sit-down meeting between Chairman Thomas Callahan, selectman Ronnie McMorris and Town Manager Mark Haddad. Callahan reported the town's desire for DeRensis to better manage the amount of time he bills the town for — had been expressed.

McMorris said the cost increases stemmed from "some increases in salaries" at the Boston law firm that was not approved until July 1.

However, selectman Merle Brown, who was the biggest objector to the raise at the July 11 meeting, continued to express his displeasure with the request. "They knew [the raises] were coming, they could have told us long before," he said.

Reporter feted

Selectmen Thomas Callahan, Ronnie McMorris and Merle Brown and Town Manager Mark Haddad expressed their thanks and appreciation to Patriot Ledger reporter Molly Hochkeppel's 17 years of reporting on the town. Hochkeppel, a Cohasset resident, is retiring from the Ledger at the end of this month.

Sen Robert Hedlund made a surprise appearance at the meeting and presented Hochkeppel with a citation from the state Senate recognizing her years of service to the community.

Hochkeppel, who supposedly was never at a loss for words during her coverage of the town, was "overwhelmed."

"This is wonderful, I don't know what to say,'" she said.

Business support grows for village vision

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

The Cohasset Revitalization Corporation has a vision for the village. The CRC envisions a village with safe sidewalks, underground wires, plentiful parking, antique park benches, gorgeous landscaping and throngs of people enjoying the downtown area. The CRC's vision isn't all that different from the one envisioned by the town's Village Revitalization Task Force.

The difference is that the VRTF is hampered by a lack of funding, while the CRC is quickly raising private seed money to help the town win state and federal grants for village improvements. The CRC's commitment to improving the village immediately is energizing many local business owners. Frank Smith, the owner of Fleming's, is one of those business owners thrilled by the CRC's mission.

"Discussion is important, but at some point you need to set things in motion," Smith said. "It's great that somebody wants to push forward with plans to improve the village. I think we're on the right track."

Peter Roy, owner of Kimball's by the Sea and Atlantica, and Gerde Ordelheide, owner of The Red Lion Inn, formed the private, non-profit CRC. The CRC has hired Dean Rizzo, former chairman of the VRTF, to lead the non-profit organization. The CRC's aim is to develop a master plan for the village and kick-start the village revitalization effort.

"We have been able to accomplish many things with the town's committee," Rizzo said. "But the town has limited resources, and the schools, sewers, and public safety take precedence over the problems in the village like sidewalks and parking. The CRC can take the village revitalization to a new level. But we'll only be able to do it in partnership with the town." Some local residents have criticized the CRC as nothing more than a tool for wealthy businessmen to advance their interests at the town's expense. Rizzo refuted such claims, saying that the CRC will be successful only with the help of the town and residents.

"Discussion is important, but at some point you need to set things in motion."
— Frank Smith, Fleming's

"We absolutely need the help of everyone in Cohasset," Rizzo said. "We want everyone's input, from town officials to the man on the street. People can attend our meetings, call us, write letters, or visit our office." The CRC is asking local businesses that have a stake in the revitalization of Cohasset Village to donate at least $1,000 to the effort if possible. Smith said he is happy to donate $1,000 to the group if the money will be used to accomplish many of the goals established by the town and the CRC for the village.

"If they need me to do anything, I'll help," Smith said.

Smith purchased Fleming's in 1983 from the previous owner, who had been in the village since 1931. Fleming's has managed to thrive in the village by carving out a niche as a gift store specializing in lampshades and silver re-plating.

"My wife and I are always trying to maximize our space," Smith said. "We're also focused on service, which is what customers really need. The foot traffic in the village is not enough to sustain a business like this. We realized there wasn't anyone around this area doing metal replating. We started with copper, brass, and pewter, then added silver. We've been able to use this as a draw to attract customers from places like Wellesley and Newton."

An advertisment Smith places in the Boston Globe magazine attracts customers from all over the country.

"Once, I got a call from a guy from Hawaii," Smith said. "He was in Boston on business and saw my ad. He sent me a trophy for repairs. I fixed it and sent it back to him in Hawaii."

Smith said having a niche allows him to attract out-of-town customers to the village, who then ask him to point out a nice local restaurant, or somewhere for a drink. Revitalizing the village would draw in even more outside business, Smith said. He said a thriving village area would benefit everyone in town, not just businesses.

"We want residents to know that we care about the town too," Smith said. "We're not interested only in our businesses. We want to support local organizations and help the town. But we need something to draw in people, and that's difficult with problems like the sidewalks being as horrific as they are right now."

Smith said the CRC could be an important tool to keep the village revitalization moving along. Smith is a long-time supporter of the village revitalization. He helped re-establish the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce in 1985. He hopes the CRC and the town will be able to develop a plan for the village that will provide Cohasset with a very special downtown area. "We got some brochures from Newburyport, and the downtown was just beautiful," Smith said. "Cohasset is beautiful too, but it needs some improvement. We can do it if we all work together."

Cohasset Revitalization Corporation opens public showroom

Street office last week, Rizzo emphasized that the proposed project is still very much in the planning process and insisted the CRC will be open for public comment and criticism.

"There will be an extensive public process," said Rizzo. "We will continue to inform people on what's going on."

The new headquarters is located at the former Victoria's By the Sea antiques shop at 87 Elm St., across from Kimball's. The location, according to Ordelheide, will help encourage local residents to stop in and give their opinions.

"People can walk into the office, have a cup of coffee and say 'This is too ostentatious,'" said Ordelheide adding that his only interest in the project is beautifying the area. "We want more people in there saying, 'Hey, this shouldn't be this or that, but this makes sense.'"

Rizzo characterized the response to the corporation as "cautious optimism," with people unsure that the project's planning stages will be open to the public.

"We hope to alleviate their fears. This office is so people can come in and be part of the process," he explained. "They can come in and look around and see what's going on. If they have a question, I'll answer it if I can."

Around the office, a series of charts and dioramas outline the corporation's structure, goals and early preliminary ideas. Visitors will be welcomed to write comments on a large map of the village and harbor areas. Some suggestions included improved sidewalks down Elm Street, and better access to the waterfront at Kimball's, a la Rowes Wharf in Boston.

"We're here to generate ideas and discuss preliminary plans," said Rizzo, adding, "We need the town to be part of that."

He also stressed no matter what the corporation comes up with for plans, it must receive town approval. The town is also responsible for applying for any state or federal monies to offset the cost of the project. "We can't do these projects on our own. Anything we recommend has to be approved by the selectmen," he said.

John Hovorka, president of the Cohasset Historical Society, feels that the CRC is a "very promising group" and would like for the corporation to work with the historical society when planning aesthetic improvements to the village and harbor areas.

"I'm a member of the National Trust for Historical Preservation, and this is the kind of things they're promoting nationally; adaptive reuse of buildings in line with historic preservation," he said.

Rizzo said the office, as of now, has no set hours, and won't until probably September. He urges people to call him at the office at 383-2449 before making a special trip down.

Organization's structure, objectives are outlined

ing the hierarchy of the corporation.

According to the chart, Rizzo oversees the board of directors, which will be made up of three "private stakeholders," two "village/harbor merchant representatives," a town representative and a representative from a non-profit organization in town.

The board will vote on approvals made by two nine-member, town advisory committees. One committee will be made up of representatives of the various town committees, and include two at-large seats for residents. Boards to be included are the planning board, historical commission, Government Island study committee, selectmen, zoning board of appeals, harbor study committee and the design review board.

The other group will include members of the town's non-profit organizations, such as the Chamber of Commerce, Cohasset Garden Club, Rotary Club, South Shore Art Center, South Shore Community Center, Cohasset Historical Society, and Lightkeepers Corporation.

Selectman Merle Brown thinks it is important for the town to work closely with the corporation in order for the CRC to be "aware of what the town is looking at and what the town can do." He hopes the town will create a citizen-based committee to specifically oversee the village project.

On one wall, CRC displays its "three primary proposals" —the "village streetscape and circulation improvement project," the "enhanced captain's walk project," and the "Elm Street Linkage Project." Other developments discussed are the St. Stephen's Walkway Project and the renovation of the Marine River Railway property, also owned by Roy.

According to CRC, the Cohasset Village project will focus on improving the area's sidewalks, parking, pedestrian and vehicle access, and lighting. Some early suggestions made by the corporation and visitors for the $2.5 million project include, granite curbing and turn-of-the century gas lights. Also being considered is a rotary-style traffic pattern through the village.

The harbor walk would call for a wooden walkway "creating a cohesive link between the town properties." It would run from the town pier on Margin Street, up to Elm Street, along Border Street and ending at the town-owned Hagerty property. Included in the early sketches is a wooden boardwalk with planters, lights and items of local interest such as a ship's wheel or a compass. According to the CRC, the $2.5 million project's feasibility is being discussed with state agencies and the design process is expected to begin next month.

The Elm Street linkage project calls for a more "pedestrian-friendly" Elm Street, which connects the village and harbor areas. The $300,000 project would include new sidewalks with small peninsulas creating parking spaces, a bike path, and new Elm trees in an attempt to recreate the old "canopy" above the street.

All three projects, according to the CRC, could be paid for by state and federal funds.

The St. Stephens's Walkway is the project furthest along. Plans are to construct an enlarged sidewalk on the cliff side of South Main Street, running from the common to the intersection of Elm Street. The project's $179,000 price tag has already been financed, thanks to a state Transportation Enhancement Grant.

A preliminary diorama of improvements to the Marine River Railway shows two more buildings built out from the northeast corner of the property, nearly doubling the size of the existing property.

Rizzo said the purpose of the office is for residents to be able to have a say in the project. He insisted that any changes made to the village or waterfront has to go through public hearings, before even making it to town meeting for a vote. "It's the job of the Cecil Group [a landscape engineering firm from Boston] to build a community consensus," he said. " We have sample plans, and anyone who wants to, can come in and take a blank plan and mark what they want to see and those results will be sent to the Cecil Group."

The office will formally open with an open house at its new office at 87 Elm St. on Thursday, August 10, from 10 a.m. - 8 p.m. For more information, call 383-2449.

AROUND TOWN

FIRST VISIT

Hello Everyone! I cannot believe it is the end of July already. I hope that you have all been able to get a few days here and there to enjoy some great summer days. These hazy, lazy days of August are coming up, make sure to enjoy them! I had the pleasure of witnessing a wonderful event at the beach last week. A family was here visiting and were enjoying their very first visit to the ocean. It was so magical to watch as the little girl had a look of pure awe and amazement on her face. Her parents were equally impressed as they tried to record the event on film as well as experience it firsthand for themselves. I offered to take some pictures for them and as I was snapping them, I realized again how lucky we are to live in such a wonderful community and be able to take in all the beauty of it each day. It was a highlight of my summer so far, remember to look and take in the "small things" that happen around us each day.

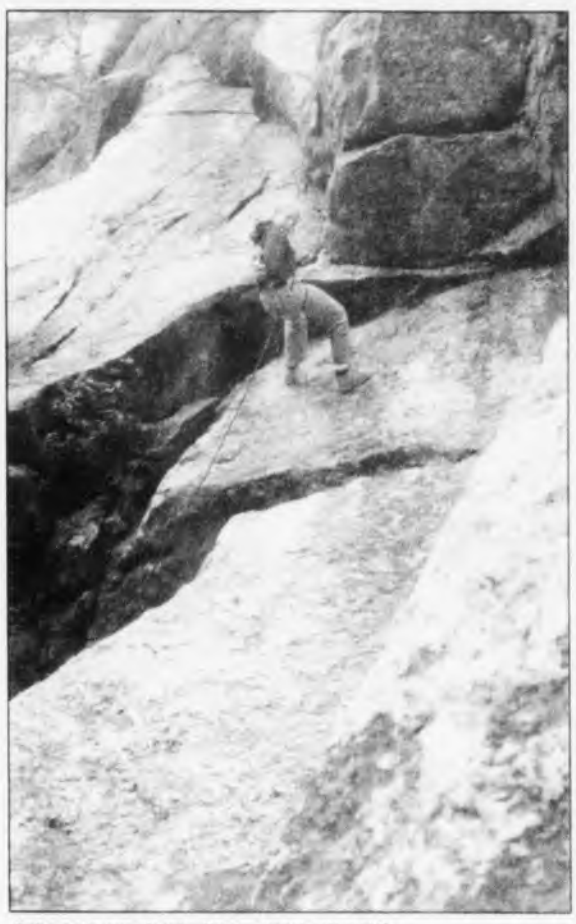
COLLEGE GRADUATE

I had a wonderful letter sent to me by Sydney Peterson of Cohasset. Sydney and her husband Charles had the recent pleasure of seeing their daughter, Nicole graduate from Hobart and William Smith Colleges in Geneva, New York. Nikki graduated with not one, but two majors, one in Anthropology-Sociology and one in Latin American Studies. Nikki was also a member of the coed sailing team for four years. Her team placed an impressive second in the June 2000 Collegiate National Championships and she was named to the Collegiate All American team. Nikki is currently enjoying a month traveling in Peru and Bolivia. Great job, Nikki, we cannot wait to hear more of your travel and ventures.

Eric Henry is a recent Bowdoin College graduate.

AWARD RECIPIENT

Another great bit of news about a man in our town. Captain Thomas M. Daley of the United States Coast Guard was awarded the Legion of Merit at a ceremony held in his honor on June 28. This high medal was presented for "outstanding meritorious service" in his recent position as Director of Marine Safety for the First Coast Guard District. Captain Daley was cited for "demonstrating superb leadership and executive management in a multitude of challenging operations... including response to the Egypt Air 990 crash and developing partnerships and teamwork with the Canadian Coast Guard." Tom and his wife Helen, and daughters, Jeannette (Jenne) and Amanda (Mamme) moved to Cohasset from Chagrin Falls, Ohio. Jenne is going into eighth grade and Mamme is going into seventh at the Cohasset Middle School. Tom is leaving the Coast Guard after seven moves to different states and accepting an administrative position with Boston University so the family can remain in Cohasset. We are glad to have you all here in our town and are honored to recognize such a wonderful person. Great work, Captain Daley!



Cohasset's own Amelia Butman repels off a cliff.

BIRTHDAY WISHES

Happy Birthday to a great guy from his wife! John Bellefontaine, celebrated his 38th Birthday on July 25. Alice wants you to know John, that you look a whole lot younger! I think we would all agree. Hope you had a wonderful day. Great adventure Wow. Amelia Butman and her mom, Georgine, went repelling for Mothers Day weekend with their Girl Scout troop from Hingham. Amelia is 10 years old and attends the Deer Hill School. This was the first time for Amelia and her mom to try this endeavor. The side of the mountain that she came down was 225 feet high! Not only that, she came down Australian style, which face first coming down. Great job, Amelia! Her Girl Scout troop is planning a trip on a 47-foot sailboat this week to cruise through the Boston Harbor. They will be seeking other great adventures and challenges very soon.

Admiral George Naccara presents Capt. Tom Daley with The Award of Legion of Merit.

BOWDOIN GRADUATE

Check out the very handsome Eric Charles Henry in his graduation attire! Eric recently graduated from Bowdoin College with a major in History and a minor in Spanish! Great work, Eric.

NEW ARRIVAL!

Hooray, we have a new little Cohasseter to announce. Emily Jane Lengyel, was born on July 5 to her proud parents, John and Brigid Lengyel. Emily joins her two big sisters, Caroline and Mary at home where she is getting plenty of love and attention, I am sure. Emily's grandparents are Edward and Canice McGlynn of Marblehead and Ronald and Dorene Lengyel of New London, N.H. Congratulations to the whole family, we cannot wait to meet Little Emily in town!

HAPPY BIRTHDAY

Another Happy Birthday wish! This time, to a wonderful Dad and Husband from Debby and Jake! Jeff Johnson of Beechwood Street will celebrate his B-Day on August 2. Sorry Jeff, we have little birds all over the place who couldn't wait to wish you a very Happy Birthday. We hope that the day is great for you and that you, Jake and Debbie do something fun to celebrate the day.

SENIOR NEWS

I have some news to share from the Cohasset Elder Affairs. Every Monday and Thursday, come take a swim at the Cohasset Swim Center at 1 p.m. Ten classes are $30 and you must pre-register by calling 383-9112. On August 17, at the Hull Pavilion, there will be a picnic that is free for all seniors. This starts at 1 am. and will have dancing and transportation provided. Call 383-9112 for more info. Get Well clinics are offered on the following days. Fri. July 28 from 10 a.m.-noon at the Harborview Housing, 60 Elm St.; Tuesday, Aug 8 at 11 a.m. at the Senior Center Luncheon Friday, Aug 25 from 10 a.m.-noon at Hingham.

Rare colonial-era boat to dock in Cohasset harbor

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

A boat not seen in Cohasset waters for more than 200 years will be tying up in the harbor today for a brief stay.

A wooden, two-sail Chebacco-style boat, named the Lewis H. Story, and built and owned by the Essex Historical Society and Shipbuilding Museum will be skippered into the harbor by Sherry Proctor, brother of Cohasset resident Vee Roebuck, en route to a rendezvous with the Mayflower II in Plymouth Harbor.

According to Proctor, Chebacco boats were first built in the Chebacco Parish of Ipswich in the first half of the 18th century. He called them the "pickup truck of the day" because they were able to be used for fishing or shipping. "During the farmers' off-season, they would fish," said Proctor. "They would carry their produce to the market on it. It was much easier to go from Cape Ann to Boston by water than land."

He said during the American Revolution, the British wiped out the existing fishing fleets and because the Chebacco boats were small and easy to build, they flourished until the turn of the century, when schooners became popular.

"They would carry their produce to the market on it. It was much easier to go from Cape Ann to Boston by water than land."
— Sherry Proctor, skipper

The Lewis H. Story was built in 1998 by well-known Essex shipwright Harold Burnham and a handful of museum volunteers, including Proctor. Despite having no plans or images to go from, Burnham based the ship's plans on museum archives and his own experience restoring and sailing Friendship sloops and other wooden vessels. The boat is 35-feet long, with two 45-foot high gaff-rigged masts. The body is made entirely out of half-inch thick white oak panels, with a pine deck and spruce masts. "The Trustees of Reservations gave us permission to go over to Hog Island and cut down some trees for it," said Proctor.

As part of his rights as a museum member, Proctor was able to take the boat out. He is on his way down to Plymouth Harbor, where we will escort the replica of the Mayflower over to Provincetown. He was granted a temporary mooring in Cohasset Harbor and is scheduled to sail in sometime Thursday afternoon (July 27). Proctor said people will be welcome to come aboard, but warned "not to expect a tall ship."

The Lewis H. Story will continue its journey to Plymouth Friday morning.

OPINION

EDITORIAL

What do you think?

A vision for the village and harbor is nothing new.

A few years back, the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce jump-started the village revitalization effort that had its roots with the village renaissance committee.

Not long before Cohasset Colonial Pharmacy and Cohasset Savings Bank had closed, which, at the time, seemed almost like a death knell for the beleaguered village. Many were worried that the town's Main Street would go the way of so many other town centers in America — out to the highway.

We remember well, the two-day village "charrette," a brainstorming event, after which architect Jim Sandell compiled renderings of what the village could look like — complete with brick sidewalks, antique lanterns and even shops facing the town parking lot behind South Main Street. It seemed both like a wonderful dream and a waste of time, with little chance of any of it coming to fruition.

But, nevertheless, here we are.

Now the Cohasset Revitalization Corporation has picked up the village revitalization ball in what, its founders hope, will become a public, private partnership.

Backed by wealthy businessmen Peter Roy and Gerde Ordelheide, CRC has big ambitions that are stirring up a hornet's nest among some residents who worry the town will become "nifty-gifty" like Nantucket or be transformed into a theme park.

But the facts are that the old Red Lion Inn's days were numbered until Mr. Ordelheide came along. Without an influx of cash to rebuild it, the venerable old place would have continued to deteriorate, becoming derelict and an eyesore, having a negative impact on the village.

It's no secret that Mr. Roy purchased the Mill River Marine Railway, a place will no doubt fall down into the harbor if nothing is done soon to restore it.

The credit for today's vitality downtown is due to a combination of factors including a robust economy, a good mix of shops and residents spending their money there.

We shouldn't forget, however, how fragile a village can be.

Town money remains extremely tight and the budget remains dependent on local property taxes that are on the rise.

So a public, private partnership can be a good thing. That doesn't mean because rich men are willing to spend a lot of money, the town should not have oversight. On the contrary, the town and its citizens should — and must — be involved every step of the way.

Here at the Cohasset Mariner, we pledge to continue the cover the village and harbor revitalization effort as we have in the past. Your opinions on the future of the town are important to us, to town officials and to the CRC.

So let us know what you think. You can log onto our website at www.townonline.com/south/cohasset and share your thoughts about the CRC and its village/harbor vision on our bulletin board. We'll utilize space in our paper to share with you what residents have to say.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Corporate colors

Dear Mr. Haddad, and the Board of Selectmen:

I'm a resident. I'm puzzled. I'm bothered. Who owns the Town of Cohasset? The taxpayers do. I'm one of the residents who pay taxes and expect my selectmen to do their best to run the town for me and for all of the 7,300 residents.

Right now it appears that Mr. Peter Roy wants to, for the moment, run/own the harbor - the town later. Just walk around the harbor. Mr. Roy's color scheme (corporate colors) is black and gray.

Start your walk at the Roy's main gate: (previous Cox estate)

- the gangway to the dock (Margin St.) - black and gray.
- the wall around his property (also town property) Kimballs is gray.
- the various benches/settees - black.
- the gazebo on Lawrence Wharf - black and gray.
- the rubbish barrels and containers - black.
- the guy wire protector (Edison property and meant to be yellow for safety reasons) is gray.
- the Atlantica and the Olde Salt House - black and gray. Yes, these last are his property and he can paint them pink if he'd like - we can't control that
- the Marine Railway - he bought that - prediction: the final rebuilt railway will be black and gray.

What would your reaction be if his corporate color was a bright pink or blue? All of the above could/would be pink or blue. It doesn't take much imagination to envision his corporate colors - black, gray, pink or blue - being carried into the village itself. All store fronts, alternately: black - gray - black - gray or in his corporate colors.

Yes, I'm puzzled - I'm bothered. Are you, the selectmen and the town manager aware of the "Corporate Colors" that now encompass the harbor?" Please - reconsider Mr. Roy's offer to paint the town black and gray. There's nothing wrong with accepting a free paint job, but we should be getting it to our specifications - not Mr. Roy's.

Let's ask ourselves these questions: "What's behind these free paint jobs we're getting? "What does Mr. Roy want in return? - "What permits does he want that he might have a problem getting?"

Let's remember "There's No Free Lunch."

Royal wrappings

TO THE SELECTMEN:

Enclosed please find copies of two (2) letters sent to the Cohasset Mariner. You may have seen them, but we would like you to have these as an indication of our concern with the manner in which we feel the Town of Cohasset is being compromised by a small group of the populace not for the town's benefit but the group's own purposes. While it is nice to have a gift horse, it is equally nice to look in its mouth. Equally imperative. One such gift was the painting task given to Mr. Roy of Kimballs by the Sea. While there is nothing wrong with the color scheme of black, gray with a touch of white, most assuredly the color scheme of the harbor's businesses owned by Mr. Roy, we wonder if the town had any input into this decision or must we also change the school colors from blue and white to this scheme. We could even change the slogan from "Blue and White, Fight, Fight" to "Gray and Black, Pillage, Sack." Talk about "master of all he surveys." The entire area ringing the harbor wears these colors. An equally nice touch is the old lilac house which is seemingly coordinated with the harbor colors. We will have to do something with the color of the new Red Lion edifice.

Another such gift appears to be the not-for-profit Cohasset Revitalization Corporation (CRC). Albeit it may not be an oligarchy as some would call it, it appears to be wielding immense power. Again, to whose benefit we may ask. This quasi money cow is nothing more than a Trojan Horse. The town needs to remain vigilant; needs to maintain control. Look this gift horse in the mouth. Look inside the "body" of this horse. Look beyond the immediate, look to the long term and wonder at the purpose of this Trojan Horse. It is easy to be influenced by royal wrappings and glitter. However, such things can cover rot and cupidity.

Wants to preserve town's historical character

TO THE EDITOR:

Years ago the town of Cohasset made a terrible decision to allow the lovely view of the harbor with its lobster boats to be sealed off by Kimballs' by the Sea! Especially bitter in that it was agreed to be kept to two stories. The mansard roof fooled only a few and now there's speculation that a third floor will be added under that roof.

My husband and I have owned a house and land in Cohasset for almost 49 years. We love Cohasset. We've recently become alarmed by the changes along Margin Street and around Border Street. Everyone has a right to do as they see fit on their own property but there seems to be no sensitivity to the neighboring houses or the rest of the town. Will there be nothing left of historical character with all the face lifting and "glitzing up"? We'll soon have a monument to money power and be a Cohasset theme park! There seems to be no historical regulations to halt this flow. Would you want a chrome and glass mall in the middle of the Common? Of course not!

I hope there will be full knowledge and approval in Town Meetings as to the direction the town wants to take in its growth. Decisions we'll all be proud of. Maybe generations from now will sense their roots and be glad we preserved the integrity of Cohasset and didn't "sell out."

Historical profile of the Wilson House

The Captain John Wilson House, 2 Elm St., Cohasset Center, first headquarters building and museum of the Cohasset Historical Society, was given to the society in 1936 by local businessman William Hamilton McGaw in memory of his second wife Priscilla Lothrop Collier. Dating from the year 1810, the house was built by housewright David Nichols on land owned by the Town of Cohasset. The house was purchased in that year by Capt. Wilson for $475. Several years later, Capt. Wilson bought from the Town of Cohasset the land upon which the house itself rested. It remained in the Wilson family until 1912 when purchased from Capt. Wilson's descendants by William H. McGaw.

Capt. John Wilson, son of Thomas and Lucy (Joy) Wilson, was born in August 1788 and became a Master Mariner. He is recorded as Master of Levi Tower's "Cohasset Packet" in 1813 when that vessel, a coastal sailing packet boat, was captured by a British warship. Capt. Wilson, his crew and the vessel later were ransomed by the owner and returned to Cohasset. Later he captained the fishing schooner "Lydia" (1819), then the "Almira" (1823) on voyages to Malaga, Norfolk and St. Thomas; the brig "Charlotte" (1827), the schooner "Eolus" (1836), the "Caroline" (1841), and the "Bounty" (1845). On the first floor of his Elm Street house the Captain is believed to have maintained a small ship chandlery or marine supply store. In later years, this lower room became a family "sitting room." The living quarters, including the kitchen and its cooking fireplace, are found on the second floor.

Originally constructed having only one room in depth from front to back (an architectural form called an "I-house") the Wilson home soon was expanded. Just a few years after the house was built, the upper floor was extended back to form an addition resting atop the granite ledge just behind the original part of the house.

Between the years 1810, when he married Hepsibah Kilby of Cohasset, and 1836, the Wilsons had three daughters and seven sons. Their sons Justin Kent Wilson and John Adams Wilson resided in the Elm Street house.

In 1912, John Adams Wilson's son Charles and daughter Sarah (Wilson) Linley deeded the family home to William H. McGaw. Under his ownership the house became a business and apartment building.

It was rented at various times and in 1920 the Pritchard family occupied it. Mr. Pritchard was a sculptor and exhibited his plaques of historical subjects here. Mrs. Pritchard opened a tea room and gift shop. Several years later the house contained, for a time, a candy shop run by Mrs. Gertrude Winslow, then in the latter '20s, Mrs. Leila Stevens and daughter again opened a tea room and gift shop.

Known as the "Mayfair Tea House," the Wilson House at times held, in addition to the tea room, an ice cream parlor, a photographer's studio, and also remained a residence. In 1930, remembered by many, the house became George Monteiro's Tailor's Shop.

Today the Capt. Wilson house is the home of collections featuring antique furniture, home furnishings, old kitchenware, children's toys and artwork from other early homes of Cohasset. Notable in its second floor kitchen is the original cooking fireplace, and in the front bedroom, an antique "corner clock" from the Samuel Bates house across the street. The Capt. John Wilson House illustrates a Cohasset home of the early and middle 19th century, and often holds special revolving exhibits relating to aspects of the town's history.

Lobsters off limits to PETA

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

Now they've gone too far. These PETA people, I mean. People for Ethical Treatment of Animals. Hah!

I didn't mind it when they put up those billboards featuring a bearded man who resembled closely the Judeo-Christian concept of an anthropomorphic deity, cautioning us, "I said, 'Thou shalt not kill.'"

I laughed with the rest of us when they protested the use of rats as a culinary delicacy on the "reality TV" show "Survivor," picketing CBS dressed in rat suits, chanting, "Rats have rights! Survive on veggies!"

I was on their side when they started their "Got Beer?" ad campaign, suggesting to college students that they drink beer instead of milk because cows and their calves suffer when Elsie is milked on a Borden's farm.

"You can drink beer responsibly," said Bruce Friedrich, the leader of PETA's vegetarian forces. "The same cannot be said of milk." Right on, Bruce!

I even stood still when they took on the practice of "rat spinning," a variation of roulette that has become popular at carnivals and church fairs in the Midwest.

The rat is placed on the wheel and covered up, and the wheel is spun. When the wheel stops, the confused rat is released to stagger into the first available numbered hole and, if you bet on that number, you're a winner.

I didn't mind any of those things. But their latest contretemps has gone beyond the bounds of decency.

I speak of their new radio commercial, which makes its debut Friday, featuring Fred Schneider of the B-52 rock band, urging people to boycott the annual Lobster Festival in Rockland, Maine, because of its cruelty to lobsters.

"I've always sung the praises of lobsters," says Schneider in the commercial, "and it really burns my butt when people drop them in a pot of boiling water, so take off those bibs and skip the lobster festival."

The festival, which starts next Wednesday and runs on for four days, annually draws some 80,000 lobster connoisseurs to Rockland to sample 17 tons of Maine's favorite succulent crustacean.

Schneider, who once had a hit record entitled "Rock Lobster," recommended that those attending the lobster festival would have been better off to settle for (ugh!) tofu chicken instead.

Me, I still prefer lobster in its natural habitat, i. e., surrounded by drawn butter and a wedge of lemon with a tulip of Cote de Beaune or some other full-bodied dry white wine on the side.

May I reprise for Schneider's and PETA's benefit the story told by Irma Rombauer in "The Joy of Cooking?" (The best lobster cookbook ever, bar none, I may add.)

A little cannibal boy was walking through the woods one day when he heard a strange noise in the sky and saw a strange object overhead.

"What's that, mom?" he asked in alarm.

"Don't worry," said mom. "It's an airplane. They're like lobsters. There's an awful lot you have to throw away but the insides are delicious."

Drinking story

TO THE EDITOR:

I am writing in regard to the article in the July 20 edition of the Cohasset Mariner covering the underage drinking arrests made on the evening of July 15 and the early morning of July 16. I was one of 15 people arrested at a party on King Street on the morning of July 16. I am not defending my actions, or the actions of other people at the party. Underage drinking is obviously a problem in Cohasset, as it is in many other areas, and perhaps the actions of the Cohasset Police Department were in fact necessary. However, the Cohasset Mariner's tabloid-like coverage of the incidents was completely unnecessary. I understand that it is the duty of the local paper to report events in the town such as this one. However, the manner in which the article was written was out of line. The events were sensationalized, and the accompanying picture of the alcohol containers which police confiscated was ridiculous and unnecessary. As a Cohasset resident for 16 years, and now a Hull resident who still receives the Mariner, the local paper has always been enjoyable to read. I was expecting the incidents that occurred to elicit an article, but not one like the article that was printed. In addition, Chief Noonan's quote, which was highlighted in the cover of the paper, was unjust. Clearly he blames our parents for these events, which is unfair. All the people arrested at the King Street party are legal adults, and therefore legally responsible for their own actions. I am not speaking for anybody else, but I take full blame for my own actions. In the future, perhaps the Cohasset Mariner will be more careful to cover all aspects of the story. Maybe this would result in more accurate, less sensationalized coverage, and a paper which less resembles an issue of a supermarket checkout line tabloid.

Lessons learned

TO THE EDITOR:

This letter is being written in response to the editorial piece published in last week's Mariner concerning the "sad situation" that now exists in regard to underage drinking in Cohasset. While I do respect the editor's right to make public her own thoughts and opinions, I must move forth in disagreement with certain aspects of the article entitled "A Wake-Up Call."

My name is Bill Kearney, an individual 19 years of age, whose name you may have noticed amongst the roster of those arrested on the now infamous night of July 14. For this reason, many may find it fit to question my opinions concerning this whole mess but I urge you to keep an open mind. While I cannot speak for the second incident allegedly involving knives, I can only hope to express my opinions concerning some of the other parties involved.

The author of last week's article focuses much of her attention on the "parental supervision," or lack thereof, that is so very instrumental to the wellbeing of the children of Cohasset. Furthermore, these opinions have been echoed by statements made by Chief of Police Brian Noonan in the Patriot Ledger. However, is it really believable that any parent can supervise, around the clock, a child in his final teenage years (the age of most of the kids arrested that night)? Is this not the age when a parent must loosen the ties of strict supervision in order to allow for growth on the part of the maturing individual. In fact, it is not uncommon to see an individual living independently out on his own at this age. I made the decision to be present at a party in the presence of alcohol. Unfortunately, I am now paying for that decision. The point is that there has been a lesson learned coming out of this situation, a lesson which will affect certain decisions in the future. So should the parents of Cohasset keep their young ones locked inside each night in hope of avoiding the "sad situations" lurking behind the unsupervised, closed doors of the town? Or should we all hope to take a lesson from this incident and continue with the learning process? The answer here should be clear enough. The blame for this incident belongs not on the shoulders of the parents of Cohasset, but rather in the hands of those making the decisions. We make mistakes, we will continue to make mistakes well into adulthood. Do not attempt to respond with harsh punishment or strict supervision. Instead, have faith that your children are trying to make the right decisions on the path toward adulthood. This is not always as simple or as easy as you might hope it to be. Bear with us, we will make it.

Lastly, I must ask the author of last week's editorial, have you ever make a mistake? If so, was it the harsh punishment enforced by a parent, or the lesson learned from the incident, which most influenced future decisions leading into and throughout adulthood?

Balanced story

TO THE EDITOR:

I want to congratulate and thank correspondent David Tibbetts on his reporting of the town's water supply disinfection results (June 1).

As Director of Public Affairs for the Department of Environmental Protection, I have witnessed how information provided can undergo a metamorphosis in the process of newsgathering. Too often environmental issues can get sensationalized, important facts omitted or the meaning changed. Unfortunately, in some instances, the public is needlessly alarmed.

From our point of view, you have served the public well by independently gathering the information, synthesizing it and providing a balanced perspective on this issue. The public has the right to hear from this and other public agencies, directly and through the media, and the responsible and thorough research of your staff is noteworthy and much appreciated.

Underage drinking

TO THE EDITOR:

Nice editorial regarding the weekend drinking incidents. (7-20-00 edition) Unfortunately I believe there will be more this summer due to conditions in the economy and relative distance from memories of recent tragedies. Would it be possible, in a future edition, to request e-mail and/or faxed information (via a form I/you could create) which would ask for suggestions for what we can do to alleviate this problem? Maybe somebody, or others collectively, have an answer.

I've always recommended printing names of the kids and the parents involved, especially those who insult the cops for doing their jobs when these incidents occur. It's been my contention that social embarrassment is much more a deterrent than fines, especially in a privileged community. Perhaps public exposure will do more to teach some people respect, too. One may disagree with this, but one certainly can't disagree with the fact that Cohasset and some other towns need to stop needing bloody deaths to bring people to their senses.

Laws are as such that even if a parent wanted to provide some sort of guidance for kids and have a chaperoned drinking affair they are at huge risk. So what do kids do? They're going to drink anyway, and somewhere. Ask a college student what happens on campus these days. Between stories of hard drugs, hard, sometimes group sex, and misused pharmaceuticals as first "social" experiences, it becomes easy to see that sending kids off to college after their hide-and-seek education isn't really an answer, either.

Away from the Band-Aid approach of more cops, more laws, more busts, etc., we may be able to do what others have had so much trouble in the past doing, but only by changing the system. It's time. A suggestion made a while back still stands. Allow parents a permit to have a party, which would include youths, at their homes with alcohol present. Kids stay on the property. A cop is hired to be there. No keys, no cars, all parents are aware of the party and their kids presence there. Something happens? No different than if something happens at an adult party or if a kid is visiting at any other time.

As long as liquor stores exist we are societally approving and endorsing drinking. Kids have to get educated about it somewhere, and they are going to get that education in manners upon which we can improve, seemingly no matter what is done, even the "after the fact" public exposure mentioned above.

Can you believe how big this problem is today? How many of those who have tried to solve it learned to drink illegally? Probably all of us. We can't keep heading down the same road and expect a different destination. We can do better than the present death and destruction lottery with those who abuse present regulations and slip by the frustrated cops and liquor store owners. That lottery really is the only catalyst of behavioral regulation. Who's next?

Mitigation fairness

Ms. Christine A. Godfrey, Assistant Chief
Regulatory Branch, Construction-Operations Division
Department of the Army
New England District, Corps of Engineers

The purpose of this letter is to request your assistance and cooperation during the Army Corps' review of the Section 106 mitigation for the proposed restoration of the Greenbush Line by the Massachusetts Bay Transportation Authority (MBTA). On behalf of the Cohasset Board of Selectmen, I would request that any approval granted by the Army Corps of Engineers for Section 106 mitigation be fairly provided and consistent on a corridor wide basis. It is crucial that all mitigation related to Section 106 be consistent with all five communities along the proposed Greenbush Corridor. This does not seem to be the case based on the recent agreement between the MBTA and the Town of Hingham.

While the Town of Cohasset supports the Town of Hingham and their negotiations with the MBTA, the Town of Cohasset expects similar mitigation. As you are aware, the recent agreement between the MBTA and Hingham includes, among other things, the creation of the Hingham Greenbush Historic Preservation Trust Fund, which sets aside $1.35 million for use by the Town of Hingham for any historic mitigation. The Town of Cohasset would expect any decision by the Army Corps relative to this mitigation be done on a corridor wide basis. Equity is important since the train will have similar impacts on all communities.

The Town of Cohasset appreciates your support and cooperation during this process and looks forward to a continued positive relationship with the Army Corps as we move forward with this project. Please feel free to contact me with any additional questions or concerns with regards to this matter. Thank you for your consideration.

Mark W. Haddad
Town Manager

Editor's note: This letter was in selectmen's correspondence.

Cohasset and Scituate on same Greenbush track

The hearings, conducted by the Army Corsp of Engineers, will identify impacts the commuter line restoration will have on historic properties along the Greenbush corridor.

Last month, selectmen sent a letter to Sullivan asking for a commitment to negotiate with the towns fairly. As of Tuesday's meeting, Cohasset had not received a response — a fact that upset both the selectmen and Town Manager Mark Haddad.

The joint-letter to Hedlund — signed by both Cohasset Selectmen Chairman Thomas Callahan and Scituate Chairman Ralph Crossen — said the towns "are quite concerned over the negotiating posture taken by the MBTA with the towns as they attempt to restore the Greenbush Line. Recent events during the negotiations have left both towns confused and uncertain. The towns are quite concerned and apprehensive continuing with the negotiations and whether the MBTA will deal with the towns in good faith."

The letter goes on to say the towns do not believe the MBTA will deal fairly with them, without the backing of the governor.

Crossen attended Tuesday's meeting briefly to sign the letter, saying Scituate "overwhelmingly" supported sending the letter.

However, as it turns out, Hedlund was "one step ahead" of the towns.

"I have already requested a meeting with Kevin Sullivan and myself...And at the same time requested a meeting with the governor," he said. According to Hedlund, he is in the process of setting up dates with both officials, and added that the joint letter should help in gaining an audience with the governor.

Callahan also said Cohasset town counsel is looking into what rights the town has regarding the town-owned tracks. Cohasset is the only town in the Greenbush corridor that owns the right of way. Hedlund added to the mix, by confirming that a small stretch of track from the Hingham town line to the old spur that eventually crosses Rte. 3A and leads into Wompatuck State Park is owned by the Department of Environmental Management. It would require a two-thirds majority vote by both branches of the legislature for the land swap to be completed.

Hedlund was confident that this small stretch of track could be the much sought after leverage the towns are looking for. "I will attempt to hold up [the swap] until your mitigation needs are met."

Callahan said Scituate is having its town counsel review the MBTA's records in an attempt to find grounds for a legal maneuver, if needed. He said the two towns will share whatever information they come up with.

The board unanimously voted to approve $1,900 a month to be paid to Wendy Frontiero in consultant fees. Scituate had already voted to approve the expenditure. Frontiero said in a letter to both towns' boards of selectmen that her role would be to review and comment on mitigation reports, draft memorandums of agreement and the Section 106 proceedings.

Fire flow tests to be conducted tonight in Cohasset

The Cohasset Water Department continues to conduct fire flow tests throughout Cohasset July 27.

"These fire flow tests will allow us to evaluate the effectiveness of the distribution system improvements we have made in the last 5 years and to help us to determine the priorities for future system improvements," said John McNabb, chairman of the water commission.

The fire flow testing will be conducted in the evening, from about 10 p.m. to 4 a.m. Customers may experience discolored water during the test and in the morning following the test.

Customers are advised to avoid washing clothes or using water during the times of the test. If discolored water is experienced, it can be reduced by running an outside faucet until the water runs clear.

The fire flow tests will be conducted on 21 hydrants throughout Cohasset.

Jason Connelly (above), of Scituate, is just one of several players Coach Scott Arnold will be looking to next year for big things.

A great season done, another one to look forward

Legion Coach sees bright future

By David Ingber

The Cohasset-Scituate Legion Baseball team made the playoffs as the number four seed with a record of 12-8, and it appears they will only be getting better with 14 of their 18 players returning next year.

"I can't give too much credit to the coaches," said Coach Scott Arnold with a laugh. "All we did was put out a line up,".

High school seniors Greg O'Keeffe and Dan Mulligan of Cohasset and Scituate's Chris Ferris and Josh Creighton will be the only ones not suiting up for C-S in the 2001 season.

"We've gotta replace O'Keeffe, obviously," said Arnold of his best pitcher this year. "And Chris Ferris; I'll miss him at second base."

Creighton, a very solid hitter and fielder, missed part of the year while playing in the State Tournament with the BC High Eagles.

On the bright side, Post 118's returning will be the younger performers who were present in last season's potent lineup.

Cohasset's Nick Bolster, who was a sophomore at Cohasset High School this past year, pitched and played shortstop extremely efficiently the whole season. And when he came down with a back injury, his replacement Jason Connelly of Scituate, played just as well.

Connelly played the final five games of the season, not committing one error at the busiest position on the diamond. He also hit above .300 for the season.

"He was just so smooth [in the field]," said Arnold. "We tried to put him at second base, and then at third base. And then we put him at shortstop, and he was just smooth."

"We are more experienced now. The players now know what's expected of them. And I think we are going to be a little tougher on them next year."-

Legion Coach Scott Arnold

C-S's pitching staff was also terrific, "the best in the Legion Conference," as O'Keeffe called it. Juniors and sophomores who will be returning next year include Bolster, Jessie Cole, Tom Fitzgerald, Tim Duggan, and Chris Carr.

"Tommy Fitzgerald did a great job," said Arnold. "I'd start him one day then have in relief the next.

"Chris Carr would show up to every game with a positive attitude. He gave us some good innings."

Cole, Duggan, and Bolster were all excellent in the games they pitched towards the end of the season, which helped Post 118 into the playoffs.

At the catcher position, C-S has two very good prospects to look to next year. David Butterworth of Scituate and Cohasset's Tim Straughan both played very solid ball the whole season, offensively and defensively.

"Tim was my backup catcher. I couldn't just take Butterworth out of there," said Arnold. "But I used Tim all over the place. I even had him in left field for one game."

Packing the power into next year's line up will be Mike Conroy of Scituate, a student at BC High. Conroy led the team in home runs this year, including a big grand slam in a win down the stretch.

The wide array of good ballplayers was the key reason to their success this season.

"I can look at my line up, one through nine, and know that any one of them can get the job done," stated Arnold. "Now that is a plus in anyone's book."

The coaches, Arnold and assistant Ralph Barry, will also be back next year.

"We are more experienced now. The players now know what's expected of them," said Arnold. "And I think we are going to be a little tougher on them next year."

A Harsh Spotlight thrown on Youth Sports

Tragedy in Reading raises serious questions, concerns

By Wayne Braverman
CNC SPORTS COORDINATOR

The public spotlight is now aimed at youth sports and the inappropriate behavior of some parents and coaches. The recent beating death of Lynnfield youth hockey coach Michael Costin in a Reading ice skating rink is causing many people to now wonder about the purpose of youth sports versus what the sometimes sad and ugly reality of it currently is.

These are games and activities for kids, they are not for us," said youth activist Bob Bigelow, a former NBA player who has been speaking across the country for seven years about the need for reform in youth sports.

Bigelow, who was a Town Online recent special chat guest along with Northwest Editor-In-Chief Richard Lodge, feels that Costin's death is "tragic" and "may well be the galvanizing event" that will bring about badly needed reforms in youth sports.

Thomas Junta of Reading was charged with manslaughter in the beating death of Costin after he allegedly became angry over the rough style of play that was taking place during a youth hockey practice.

I thoroughly believe the more time and money parents spend on their children in a particular sport ratchets up the intensity of their involvement. Youth ice hockey and youth soccer are two very good examples," said Bigelow, a 1975 first round NBA draft pick by the Kansas City Kings.

There have been incidents of adults being thrown out of gymnasiums, rinks or away from the fields. However, there have also been incidents where parents have refused to leave and games have been forfeited. Usually, once you ask a parent to leave they are so embarrassed, they will leave and often mend their ways. However, pre-season meetings and proper adult conversations prior to the problem will generally yield no problem," he added during Friday's chat.

The Winchester resident points out that codes of conduct have helped in some places.

But the problem with youth sports is not just parents on the sidelines who run their mouths and display their tempers. Coaches who lose sight of the fact that they are coaching kids and not miniature pro athletes are hurting youth sports as well.

I know people in Florida who are presenting mandatory sportsmanship and ethics courses for parents. They are wonderful folks and have been working with youth sports groups for 20 years. The community in Florida, Jupiter/Tequesta, is the first community in America to mandate parent's ethics courses. After this Reading incident, there will be many more to follow," Bigelow said.

There is a national bill of rights for children in sports. It has been around for 20 years. Before the season begins, hand this to all the adults coaches and parents…Any one incident gets a warning. The next incident is banishment.

"In the past year, several youth leagues around the country have mandated silence by adults, both coaches and parents. It certainly proves the point. As I tell parents all the time, if you can not encourage and be positive, you have two choices - get lost or shut up."

But the problem with youth sports is not just parents on the sidelines who run their mouths and display their tempers. Coaches who lose sight of the fact that they are coaching kids and not miniature pro athletes are hurting youth sports as well.

"Too many coaches are out there to win games and they don't develop players," noted Bigelow. "The biggest problem in youth sports is that they are 40-year-olds who haven't been kids in 30 years."

He points to a USA Today survey of a group of Baby Boom generation men, 70 percent of whom felt they "would have, could have, should have" made the pros in a sport if it wasn't for injuries, favoritism or some other twist of fate along the way. This "adult male ego" too often shows up on the youth sports fields, courts and rinks. These coaches are creating, as Bigelow calls it, "achievement by proxy. These are parents who didn't have the opportunity to be a star. Now their kids do."

Bigelow, who also coaches youth basketball in Winchester, designs programs to "maximize the number of children participating. The number one priority is playing time."

"What you have to do is create youth sports systems that minimize Cohasset's Peter Maitland, Tim Baird and Steven Laney. These three Cohasset High juniors were members of the elite Southeast regional soccer team at the annual Bay State Games, which concluded this weekend. The three boys helped the Southeast team win a Silver Medal, but fell one goal short of the gold in a heartbreaking 2-1 loss to the Northeast team.

Bay state games wrap up

The 19th Annual Bay State Games finished up this past weekend. There were competitions in 24 different sports taking place in the greater Boston and greater Worcester areas, with over 10,000 Massachusetts athletes of all ages participating in this Olympic-style sports festival, including 14 from Cohasset.

Ernst ran for a gold medal in the junior division mile with a time of 5:05.55, and a silver in the 800 meter (2:14.05).

Maitland, who also played on the elite Southeast regional soccer team at the games, captured first place in the javelin competition with a throw of 162'10".

Campagna earned a gold in the 110-meter race with a time of 15.89 seconds.

Lauren Smith was a member of the field hockey team from Thayer Academy that captured the gold medal in the 6-on-6 tourney from among a field of 48 teams.

Tim Baird, who like Maitland also played soccer at the games, grabbed 4th place in the scholastic mile with a time of 4:52.75. He's going into his junior year at Cohasset High School.

Krupczak— this year's state Division 3 champion in the 200 meter-run— showed versatility, in addition to speed, to finish third in the 100-meter run with a time of 11.36 seconds.

Hart finished sixth in the 200 meter with a time of 28.52 seconds.

Ben Kinch finished with a 3-3 record to capture sixth place overall in the 160-pound wrestling class.

Cohasset swimmers stay perfect

By Eileen McBride
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

In the fourth meet of the summer season, Friday, the Cohasset swim team extended their winning streak with another excellent performance against the Scituate Harbor Yacht Club. In a hard fought competition, Cohasset finished 200 points ahead of Scituate to improve their record to 4-0.

Cohasset got off to a flying start with first, second and third places in the boys and girls, 8 and under, 100 yard medley relay (boys: 1st: Shipp, Porter, Doonan, Carrier; 2nd: Yeager, Buckley, Stevenson, Durkin, T.; 3rd: Queenan, Wise, Poh, Murphy; girls: 1st: Mahoney, Kelly, Lehr, Zappolo; 2nd: Murphy, Teague, Madge, Fontaine; 3rd: Faulkner, Karski, Dickinson, Libby).

The 10 and under boys followed close behind, again finishing first, and also taking third and fourth place (1st: Hunt, Musto, Cunningham, Doonan; 3rd: Muir, Drybanski, Shipp, Gritzan; 4th: Poh, Kelly, Ulmer, Yeager). The 10 and under girls just missed the win, but took second, third and fifth positions (2nd: Sacks, Lehr, Mahoney, Hernan; 3rd: Teague, Fortin, Campbell, McCarthy, M.; 5th: McCarthy, C., Meikleham, Coggins, Anderson). The 100 yard relay medleys finished with a win from the twelve and under boys and girls (boys: 1st: Hernan, Dickinson, Berg, Zappolo; 2nd: Hospod, Conway, McCarthy, D., McCarthy, J.; 4th: Daly, Reach, Faber, Simms; girls: 1st: Musto, Shea, Sida, Englander; 3rd: Harrington, Swain, Crowley-Buck, Whoriskey; 4th: Fougere, Coggins, Wheelwright, Daly).

In the 200-yard medley relays the 17 and under boys finished first, and second, and the girls took second, fourth and fifth places. By this stage in the meet Cohasset had established a 20-point lead (boys: 1st: Bilton, Ingber, McCarthy, Lehr; 2nd: Tehranian, Faber, Flynn, Blackburn; girls: 2nd: Larson, Anderson, Orsini, Lehr; 4th: Marr, Grimm, Scribner, Foley; 5th: Weston, Faber, Ogrodnik, Chase).

As the individual races got under way, the 10 and under girls again just missed a win, but took second, third and fifth positions in the 50 yards freestyle (2nd: Mahoney, C.; 3rd: Campbell, A.; 4th: Teague, M.), while the boys finished second, fourth and fifth (2nd: Doonan, P.; 4th: Cunningham, C.; 5th: Shipp, A.).

The 100 yard individual medleys were next up and with five wins out of six, Cohasset's lead went from 20 to almost 40 points (boys, 12 and under: 1st: Dickinson, R.; 2nd: Conway, C., 3rd: McCarthy, J.; girls, 12 and under: 1st: Musto, L.; 5th: Shea, E.; 6th: Crowley-Buck, M.; boys, 14 and under: 1st: McCarthy, W.; 3rd: Regan, C.; girls, 14 and under: 1st: Orsini, M. 3rd: Ogrodnik, M.; 4th: Harrington, B.; boys, 17 and under: 1st: Ingber, D.; 2nd: Blackburn, C.; girls, 17 and under: 2nd: Larson, J.; 3rd: Regan, D.; 4th: Foley, C.).

In the freestyle events, again Cohasset brought home a string of wins. In the 8 and under 25-yard freestyle, both the boys and girls finished first, second and third (boys: 1st: Porter, I.; 2nd: Stevenson, G.; 3rd: Carrier, J.; girls: 1st: Zappolo, C.; 2nd: Mahoney, M.; 3rd: Murphy, O.). The 10 and under boys and girls placed first, second and fourth (boys: 1st: Hunt, A.; 2nd: Poh, R.; 4th: Drybanski, J.; girls: 1st: Lehr, S.; 2nd: Mahoney, C.; 4th: Sacks, M.). In the 12 and under 50-yard events, the boys took first, second and third (1st: Berg, P.; 2nd: Hernan, A.; 3rd: Zappolo, N.) and the girls finished first, second and fourth (1st: Englander, E.; 2nd: Whoriskey, K.; 4th: Madge, M.). The 14 and under boys secured a further win, and the girls claimed second, third and fifth places (boys: 1st: Bilton, B.; 3rd: Simms, C.; girls: 2nd: Anderson, C., 3rd: Lehr, R.; 5th: Chase, J.). The freestyles were rounded off with a win for the 17 and under boys and third, fourth and sixth places for the girls (boys: 1st: Lehr, R. 2nd: Ingber,; 4th: Blackburn, C.; girls: 3rd: Marr, M.; 4th: Regan, D.; 6th: Grimm, K.). Cohasset's score was now 167, to Scituate's 87.

The butterfly is always a tough event, but the 8 and under competitors took it in their stride, placing first and second in each of their races (boys, 25 yard butterfly: 1st: Doonan, B.; 2nd: Shipp, M.; 4th: Murphy, J.; girls: 1st: Lehr, T.; 2nd: Madge, K.; 3rd: Zappolo, C.). The 10 and under boys also took first and second places, while the girls missed the win but finished second, fourth and fifth (boys: 1st: Doonan, P.; 2nd: Cunningham, C.; 4th: Musto, K.; girls: 2nd: Hernan, E.; 4th: Campbell, A.; 5th: Meikleham, A.). The 12 and under boys swept the board with first, second and third places (1st: Berg, P.; 2nd: McCarthy, D.; 3rd: Conway, C.) and the girls ended the 25-yard series with a win, a third and a fifth place (girls 12 and under: 1st: Englander, E. 3rd: Swain, K.; 5th: Sida, C.)

The 50-yard butterflies brought Cohasset continued success with wins in the boys 14 and under, and boys 17 and under races (boys, 14 and under, 50 yards butterfly: 1st: Tehranian, K.; 2nd: McCarthy, W.; 3rd: Flynn, C.; boys, 17 and under, 50 yards butterfly: 1st: Ingber, D.). The 14 and under girls held on to second, third and fourth positions, and the 17 and under girls finished third and fourth (girls 14 and under: 2nd: Orsini, M.; 3rd: Foley, T.: 4th: Mello, M.; girls, 17 and under: 3rd: Faber, A.; 4th: Scribner, J.). As the butterfly events were concluded, Cohasset led Scituate by 112 points.

The breaststroke races began with the 25-yard events and with first, second and third placements for both the 8 and under girls and boys (boys: 1st: Buckley, T.; 2nd: Porter, I.; 3rd: Stevenson, G.; girls: 1st: Fontaine, E.; 2nd: Kelly, M.; 3rd: Madge, K.). The 10 and under boys and girls followed with wins in their races (boys: 1st: Hunt, A.; 3rd: Musto, C.; 5th: Drybanski, J.; girls: 1st: Lehr, S. 2nd: Fortin, S.; 3rd: Meikleham, A.).

Congratulations are again in order for a victorious Cohasset. With four wins behind them they look forward to their next outing on Friday against the Knights of Columbus.

With the move from 25-yard to 50-yard breaststroke, once again Cohasset claimed first and second in the boys, 12 and under (1st: Dickinson, R.; 2nd: Zappolo, N.; 4th: Roach, K.). The 12 and under girls followed with second, third and sixth places (2nd: Shea, E.; 3rd: Sida, C.; 6th: Coggins, E.). The 14 and under boys brought home another win and the girls just missed a first, but finished second, third and fourth positions (boys: 1st: Bilton, B.; 3rd: Simms, C.; 4th: Regan, C.; girls: 2nd: Anderson, C.; 3rd: Sanchez, A.; 4th: Mello, M.). The 17 and under boys finished in first and second places and the girls wound up the breaststroke in second, fourth and fifth places (boys: 1st: Lehr, R.; 2nd: Faber, S.; girls: 2nd: Faber, A.; 4th: Grimm, K.; 5th: Foley, C.). With a score of 289, Cohasset now led Scituate by 149 points.

Maintaining their pace, Cohasset produced a run of excellent times to take first place in all four of the 25-yard backstroke races (boys, 8 and under: 1st: Doonan, B.; 3rd: Yeager, J.; 5th: Shipp, M.; girls, 8 and under: 1st: Mahoney, M.; 2nd: Murphy, D.; 4th: Faulkner, A.; boys, 10 and under: 1st: Hunt, A.; 2nd: Shipp, A.; 5th: Bell, D.; girls, 10 and under: 1st: Hernan, E.; 3rd: Sacks, M.; 4th: McCarthy, C.).

The 50-yard backstroke events produced four further wins from six races (boys, 12 and under: 1st: Hernan, A.; 2nd: McCarthy, D.; 3rd: Hospod, T.; girls, 12 and under: 1st: Musto, L.; 3rd: Harrington, K.; 4th: Fougere, K.; boys, 14 and under: 1st: Tehranian, K.; 2nd: Flynn, C.; 3rd: Regan, C.; girls, 14 and under: 2nd: Lehr, R. (tie); 2nd: Foley, T. (tie); 4th: Weston, E.; boys, 17 and under: 1st: Faber, S.; girls, 17 and under: 2nd: Larson, J.; 5th: Marr, M.; 6th: McCarthy, K.R.). And the points piled on and with the individual events completed Cohasset had stretched its lead to from 149 to187.

The meet finished with the usual run of 100-yards free relays and Cohasset didn't miss a beat, winning six out of six races (boys, 8 and under: 1st: Carrier, Stevenson, Porter, Doonan; 2nd: Campbell, Ofsthun, Førrer, Durkin, J.; 4th: Faber, McCarthy, MacCormack, Plante; girls, 8 and under: 1st: Mahoney, Murphy, Lehr, Zappolo; 2nd: Dickinson, Libby, McBride, Musto; 4th: Connors, Donohue, Fortin, Regan; boys, 10 and under: 1st: Doonan, Cunningham, Shipp, Drybanski; 3rd: DeGiacomo, Kuppens; Daly, Porter; 4th: Parker, Wheelwright, McCarthy, Sceery; girls, 10 and under: 1st: Mahoney, Sacks, Lehr, Hernan; 4th: Baumgarten, Gaumer, Durkin, Foley; 5th: Costa, Dunn, Hunt, Meikleham; boys, 12 and under; 1st: Zappolo, Dickinson, Berg, Hernan; 2nd: Conway, Hospod, McCarthy, J., McCarthy, D.; 4th: Simms, Faber, Gammon, Daly; girls, 12 and under: 1st: Englander, Swain, Whoriskey, Musto; 4th: Madge, Muir, Ch.; Muir, Ca., Lee; 6th: McBride; Smith, Tehranian, Wilcox). The 17 and under boys added to the victories with a win in their 200-yard relay, while the girls finished second, fourth and fifth (boys, 17 and under: 1st: Faber, Lehr, Bilton, McCarthy; girls, 17 and under, 200 yards free relay; 2nd: Anderson, Larson, Lehr, Orsini; 4th: Ogrodnik, Foley, Harrington, Regan; 5th: Faber, McCarthy, K., Marr, Sanchez). Cohasset finished the meet with 411 points to Scituate's 200.

Congratulations are again in order for a victorious Cohasset. With four wins behind them they look forward to their next outing on Friday against the Knights of Columbus. And thanks again to our coaches Allison and Michael and all the volunteers who support the team at all levels - especially those who, four days a week, get their children out of bed for those early morning training sessions.

Spotlight on Youth Sports or completely eliminate the trappings of much higher level sports participating. For example, drafting of young children, travel, select, elite teams being picked with all the attending politics often times creates an environment where this stuff is taken far too seriously when all it should be is a child's game."

He sees a trend with select travel all-star teams being picked at younger ages. He figures that the day may come in youth soccer when there will be "prenatal soccer in America - U-0. Some of them think it's never too early to start."

One of the biggest problems in youth sports, according to Bigelow, is that it "regulates against late-blooming bodies. It's so foolish to rate players. What they are saying to a child who hasn't developed yet is 'You're not good enough.' They are being tiered."

But the problem is not youth sports as a body. Bigelow says that youth sports are "neither good or bad. It's the adults. It's great if the right people are running it."

One of the keys to making a youth sports program successful is to understand what is age appropriate. Another is to focus more on letting the kids play, less on winning and losing.

However, within the organized time period, we can create activities that allow kids to play on their own. I call it organizing the time, unorganizing the process."

And of course, parents and coaches need to model appropriate behavior.

"It is extremely difficult to teach our children to behave properly when every day, the media portrays improper behavior in sports. However, they're still our kids and we must solider on. And even the ages of 7, 8 and 9, we can let our children know that what they see on TV is often entertainment - this is what they do for a living. But this is not the type of behavior we want to see on the fields, courts and rinks. We hold ourselves to higher standards."

After the incident in Reading, more people are now ready to listen to the standards Bigelow has been talking about for seven years.

Cohasset Swimmers Win third in a row

Swim results from July 14 meet

By Eileen McBride
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Cohasset swimmers came away with their third comprehensive win of the season a week ago Friday, outpointing Hanover's South Shore YMCA squad.

The meet began well with consistently impressive performances in the 100-yard medley relay. In the first three races the 8 and under boys and girls, and the 10 and under boys took first and second places, while the 10 and under girls finished second, third and fifth (boys, 8 and under: 1st: Queenan, Porter, Doonan, Durkin, T.; 2nd: Yeager, Murphy, Buckley, Ofsthun; 4th: Carrier, Shipp, Campbell, Durkin, J.; girls, 8 and under: 1st: Mahoney, Sullivan, Lehr, Zappolo; 2nd: Teague, Kelly, Madg, Libby; 5th: Jennings, Donohue, Musto, Axelson; boys, 10 and under: 1st: Doonan, Hunt, Cunningham, Shipp; 2nd: Muir, Musto, Gritzan, Daly; 4th: Porter, Kelly, Yeager, Bell; girls, 10 and under: 2nd: Mahoney, Fortin, Hernan, Lehr; 3rd: McCarthy, Costa, Campbell, Meehan; 5th: Hunt, Foley, Baumgarten, Meikleham).

The 12 and under boys and girls maintained the momentum winning both their 100-yard medley races (boys, 12 and under: 1st: Hernan, Conway, Berg, Zappolo; 2nd: Hospod, Roach, Dickinson, McCarthy; 3rd: Daly, Faber, McCarthy, Gammon; girls, 12 and under: 1st: Daley, Durkin, Garber, Englander; 3rd: Harrington, Shea, Musto, Swain; 5th: Crowley-Buck, Sida, James, Whoriskey). The medley relays ended with the seventeen and under girls and boys also claiming first and second places in their 200-yard races (boys, 17 and under: 1st: Ingber, Faber, McCarthy, Lehr; 2nd: Roach, Bilton, Flynn, Regan; girls, 17 and under: 1st: Larson, Faber, Garber, Lehr; 2nd: Foley, Ogrodnik, Orsini, Regan; 3rd: Weston, Hurley, Marr, Harrington). With the conclusion of the first phase of the competition, Cohasset led Hanover, 60 points to 36.

The individual medleys produced a further run of excellent times securing a win for Cohasset in each age group (boys, 12 and under: 1st: Berg, P.; 2nd: Dickinson, R.; 3rd: McCarthy, D.; girls, 12 and under: 1st: Durkin, L.; 3rd: Musto, L.; boys, 14 and under: 1st: McCarthy, W.; girls, 14 and under: 1st: Orsini, M. 2nd: Garber, R.; 5th: Harrington, B.; boys, 17 and under: 1st: Faber, S.; 2nd: Roach, J.; girls, 17 and under: 1st: Larson, J. 3rd: Carter, C.). The score, by this stage was 117, giving Cohasset a close to 70-point lead.

Success continued with the freestyle events. In the 10 and under 50-yard freestyle, the boys finished in first, second and fifth place (1st: Doonan, A.; 2nd: Cunningham, C.; 5th: Shipp, A.), while the girls took second, third and fourth (2nd: Hernan, E.; 3rd: Campbell, A.; 4th: Teague, M.). In the 25-yard freestyle races, Cohasset again brought home a win at every age level (boys 8 and under: 1st: Carrier, J.; 2nd: Durkin, T.; 4th: Murphy, J.; girls 8 and under: 1st: Zappolo, C.; 2nd: Mahoney, M.; 3rd: Sullivan, O.; boys 10 and under: 1st: Hunt, A.; 2nd: Muir, K.; 3rd: Musto, C.; girls 10 and under: 1st: Mahoney, C.; 3rd: Teague, M.; 5th: McCarthy, C.). And in the remaining 50-yard freestyle events Cohasset won the 12, 14, and 17 and under races for both boys and girls (boys 12 and under: 1st: Hernan, A.; 2nd: Zappolo, N.; 3rd: Conway, C.; girls 12 and under: 1st: Garber, C.; 2nd: Daley, M.; 4th: Whoriskey, K.; boys 14 and under: 1st: Flynn, C.; 4th: Regan, C.; girls 14 and under: 1st: Lehr, B.; 2nd: Larson, J.; 3rd: Faber, A.; boys 17 and under:1st: Lehr, R. 2nd: Roach, J.; 3rd: Blackburn, C.; girls 17 and under: 1st: Carter, C.; 5th: Chase, J.; 6th: McCarthy, K.R.).

The 25 butterfly brought a further series of wins. In five of the six races Cohasset finished first (boys 8 and under:1st: Doonan, B.; 3rd: Porter, I; 5th: Ofsthun, C.; girls 8 and under:1st: Lehr, T.; 2nd: Jennings, M.; 5th: Fontaine, E.;boys 10 and under: 2nd: Doonan, P.; 3rd: Cunningham, C.; 4th: Gritzan, K.; girls 10 and under: 1st: Hernan, E.: 3rd: Lehr, S.; 4th: Campbell, A.; boys 12 and under:1st: McCarthy, D. 2nd: Dickinson, R.; 3rd: McCarthy, J.; girls 12 and under: 1st: Garber, C.; 2nd: Sida, C. 5th: James, K.) In the 50-yard butterflies Cohasset claimed first position in three of the four races. In the girls, 17 and under, swimmers finished second, third and fourth (50-yard butterfly: boys 14 and under: 1st: McCarthy, W.; girls 14 and under: 1st: Garber, R.; 2nd: Afstar, Y.; 4th: Ogrodnik, M.; boys 17 and under:1st: Ingber, D.; 2nd: Blackburn, C.; girls 17 and under: 2nd: Orsini, M.; 3rd: Carter, C.; 4th: Schribner, J.). The home team had now amassed 256 points to Hanover's 87.

The breaststroke events came next. With tremendous consistency, Cohasset continued to dominate the meet. In the 25-yard breaststroke, the 8 and under boys and girls finished in first, second and third places (boys 8 and under: 1st: Doonan, B.; 3rd: Porter, I.; 3rd: Campbell, B.; girls 8 and under: 1st: Teague, K.; 3rd: Sullivan, O.; 3rd: Lehr, T.). The 10 and under boys also occupied first, second and third places and the girls just missed the win but took second, third and fourth (boys 10 and under: 1st: Hunt, A.; 3rd: Musto, C.; 3rd: Daly; girls 10 and under: 2nd: Lehr, S. 3rd: Fortin, S.; 4th: Costa, A.).

In the 50-yard races Cohasset claimed five out of a possible six wins and brought the score to 326 against Hanover's 106 (boys 12 and under: 1st: Zappolo, N.; 2nd: Conway, C.; 4th: Roach, K.; girls 12 and under: 1st: Durkin, L.; 2nd: Shea, E.; 3rd: Sida, C.; boys 14 and under: 1st: Bilton, B.; 3rd: Regan, C.; girls 14 and under: 1st: Faber, A.; 2nd: Afshar, Y.; 3rd: Regan, D.; boys 17 and under: 1st: Ingber, D.; 2nd: Faber, S.; girls 17 and under: 2nd: Hurley, K.; 3rd: Weston, E. 4th: Harrington, B.).

The backstroke events brought the first and only signs of a slight chink in Cohasset's armor. In the 25-yard backstroke, the 8 and under boys finished second, third and fourth, although the girls took first, third and fourth positions (boys 8 and under: 2nd: Queenan, C.; 3rd: Carrier, J.; 4th: Yeager, J.; girls 8 and under: 1st: Mahoney, M.; 3rd: Dickinson, R.; Zappolo, C.). In the 10 and under, once again, Cohasset missed the win, but took second, fourth and fifth in the boys race (2nd: Shipp, A.; 4th: Daly, R.; 5th: Gritzan, K.), and third, fourth and fifth in the girls race (3rd: Regan, M.; 4th: Mahoney, C.; 5th: Hurd, A.).

Any lost ground was, however, recovered in the 50-yard backstroke. Again Cohasset occupied first place in five of the six races (boys 12 and under: 1st: Hernan, A.; 2nd: Berg, P.; girls 12 and under: 1st: Musto, L. 2nd: Daley, M.; 3rd: Harrington, K.; boys 14 and under: 1st: Bilton,B.; 2nd: Flynn, C.; girls 14 and under: 1st: Lehr, B.; 2nd: Weston, E. 3rd: Foley, T.; boys 17 and under: 1st: Lehr, R.; 2nd: Blackburn, C.; girls 17 and under: 2nd: Chase, J.; 3rd: Scribner, J.). With the completion of the individual events, Cohasset's score had now reached 384 and Hanover was trailing by 247 points.

The last section of the meet was occupied with the 100 and 200-yard free relays. In a pattern now established over three meets, with one exception, the boys and girls of each age group took first and second places in each of the concluding relay events (boys 8 and under, 100 yards free relay: 1st: Carrier, Murphy, Durkin, T., Doonan; 2nd: Buckley, Ofshun, Lynner, Queenan; 5th: Faber, McCarthy, MacCormack, Plante; girls 8 and under, 100 yards free relay: 1st: Mahoney, Sullivan, Lehr, Zappolo; 2nd: Dickinson, Jennings, Fontaine, Teague; 4th: Culhane, Donohue, Fortin, Karski; boys 10 and under, 100 yards free relay: 1st: Doonan, Cunningham, Shipp, Hunt; 2nd: Muir, Musto, Daly, Gritzar; 3rd: Parker, Kuppens, McCarthy, Sceery; girls 10 and under, 100 yards free relay: 1st: Mahoney, Meehan, Lehr, Hernan; 2nd: Fortin, Regan, Teague, Campbell; 5th: McCarthy, Gaumer, McElhinny, Hurd; boys 12 and under, 100 yards free relay: 1st: Zappolo, Conway, Berg, Hernan; 2nd: Dickinson, Hospod, McCarthy, McCarthy; 4th: Roach, Faber, Masotta, Daly; girls 12 and under, 100 yards free relay: 1st: Daley, Musto, Garber, Durkin; 4th: Englander, Shea, Sida, Lee; 6th: Coggins, Condon, Fougere, Lieb-Lappen; boys 17 and under, 200 yards free relay: 1st: Faber, Lehr, Ingber, McCarthy; 2nd: Roach, Blackburn, Bilton, Flynn; girls 17 and under, 200 yards free relay: 1st: Garber, Larson, Lehr, Carter; 2nd: Afshar, Faber, Regan, Orsini; 3rd: Foley, Scribner, Ogrodnik, McCarthy). The relays complete, Cohasset finished with a final score of 448, beating Hanover by 279 points.

Congratulations, again for a tremendous win. We look forward to the team's next competition against Scituate Harbor Yacht Club on Friday July 21st. And well done swimmers, coaches and volunteers.

Production melds author's and composer's masterpeices

this weekend at Cohasset Town Hall.

The production is an original creation of Nicynski's, who melded some of the language of William Shakespeare's play "Romeo and Juliet" with Leonard Bernstein's musical adaptation of the tragic story, "West Side Story."

"One of the all-time favorite plays is West Side Story...and I absolutely love Romeo and Juliet," he said. "So I said why not put [West Side Story] back to Romeo and Juliet."

Nicynski added some dialogue from Shakespeare's play to Bernstein's and rewrote Act 2 entirely. The result is a mutt of the two plays, with the flowery language of the two Verona youth being spoken through Manhattan's Tony and Maria.

"I wanted to do something new and different," he said. "I like shows that have a message and are not just about entertainment."

The play is the end result of an intensive theatre workshop being run by Nicynski, a Boston College student and experienced stage performer.

Fifty area youth, with the majority from Cohasset, are participating in the workshop. Nicynski said one special aspect of this production is that all characters are played by people whose ages are "on scale" with whom they are portraying. For example, 16-year-old Maria is being played by 16-year old Caitlin Murphy of Quincy, and 16-year old Tony is being played by 16-year-old Nick Mott of Norwell. Also featured in the play is Cohasset police detective Frederick Grassie playing Detective Krupke. The Rev. Gary Ritts will lend his talents to the part of Father Laurence.

The performances will cap-off the workshop that gave its participants not only theatrical lessons by Nicynski, but vocal lessons at the Cohasset Community Center with Karen Ginsberg, a Norwell vocal performance trainer, and dance lessons at the Congregational Church with choreographer Jessica Hobin. "I loved the feeling of a college campus," said Nicynski. "They'd dance at the community center, then cross over the common with their books and backpacks to the congregational church and then to town hall."

He also extended the two storys' cross-over to the set. Nicynski designed the sets to include the West Side apartment buildings, with Shakespearean curtains, and red rose vines intertwined along the chain-link fence.

Professional set builders Charles Stuart brought the set to life, and Bergstrom Music is handling the sound. Their costs are paid for by the workshop fees.

"This is a business," Nicynski said of the workshop. "There is money changing hands, a lot of politics involved, lighting designs, and technical designs, an orchestra and costumes."

This workshop is the first one to be held during the summer. The program has traditionally been held during the school year. Though the schedule is grueling – participants rehearse five hours a day, 6 days a week – it has been worthwhile, Nicynski and the performers.

"They are exhausted and I am exhausted," said Nicynski, who will be starting rehearsals for a play at Boston's Robsham Theatre next month. "We're putting on a full-scale musical in three weeks."

"The kids are unbelievable," says Nicynski. "When I did [the workshop] in Weymouth, I had to do something different to keep them challenged. I'm interested in seeing Nicynski's production come true. "Shakespeare's West Side Story" will be performed this weekend, July 28-30, at 8 p.m. Tickets are $10 and can be purchased beforehand at Cohasset Hardware or Buttonwood Books.

School committee gets great price on computers

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Not only will the Cohasset School Department get 61 new computers for much less than expected, but those computers will be faster, installed for free, and receive a three-year warranty.

When school technology head Ken Cisneros told the school committee Monday — Stephanie Noble summed up the board's opinion by asking, "Is this too good to be true?"

The answer is no. RJT Computers of Weymouth, submitted a bid to supply the schools with 61 new computers with 650-megahertz, Pentium 3 processors, 128 megabytes of RAM, a 20-gigabyte hard drive, a 52-speed CD-ROM drive and 17-inch monitor for $60,777 – nearly $9,000 less than the second lowest bid. When the school department put out the bid, it only asked for 600-megahertz Pentium 3 processors.

RJT Computers owner Jim Tombari also included free installation, a two-week delivery time, and a three-year part and labor warranty.

"The machines we are getting now cost less than what's in the lab now, and are twice as fast," said Cisneros.

Sixteen companies submitted bids, however four companies bids were delivered 15 minutes late and by state law couldn't be opened. The companies could have bid on supplying the computers, installing the computers, or both. Eight companies bid on both jobs, including RJT Computers.

According to Cisneros, Tombari is the department's consultant for its computer network service and said he has been "happy with his past service."

Ken Cisneros said because the "dollar is stretching," he will be able to have a computer and printer in every classroom in Cohasset.

He also said because the "dollar is stretching," he will be able to have a computer and printer in every classroom in Cohasset. Cisneros is now the only technology teacher at the Osgood and Deer Hill Schools. Due to budget constraints, the school committee was forced to cut the technology aide this year, despite parents' protests.

This spring, town meeting passed a $150,000 technology appropriation article which will pay for the 61 new computers. The school committee unanimously voted to accept the bid.

Road repaving to be finished by fall

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Sewer pipe installation is scheduled to be completed by September, and areas where work has already concluded should be operational in the near future, Dan Coughlin, of Tutela Engineering told selectmen Tuesday night.

Coughlin, sitting alongside sewer commissioner Ray Kasperowicz and Tutela Engineering president Domenic Tutela, updated the board on the long sewer-installation process the town has experienced over the past year.

He had nothing but good news for the board. His report included:

• work in North Cohasset was expected to commence Wednesday, and that residents are now allowed to install the connections to the sewer line.

• the central Cohasset part of the project has had its state-imposed deadline extended to October to finish installation. He said work is finishing up on South Main Street (where the road is blocked off), Summer Street and on Route 3A near Pond Street.

• street repaving – the biggest headache to residents – has begun. So far Norfolk Road, Short Street, Bancroft Lane and Ash Street have been repaved. Coughlin was told by D'Amico Construction, the project's main contractor, that repaving will be done in two-to-three week intervals, in order for D'Amico to properly prep the roads, and raise the castings in the streets. He said all paving should be completed by the end of October.

Tutela said that D'Amico is on a retainer for the paving project for the next year and will be responsible for performing any re-repaving, if needed, after the winter and the roads settle.

One resident concern, expressed by selectmen Ronnie McMorris, was over a lack of contractors licensed by the town's sewer commission to perform the sewer connections.

"The timeframe to have them installed is very limited...[Homeowners] are concerned about having enough time," she said.

Coughlin responded by saying residents have up to nine months – possibly as long as a year – to hook up to the sewer line and said the number of contractors available to perform the work has grown.

"More and more are applying for licenses," said Coughlin. "I'm sure the list will increase."

Coughlin said homeowners will receive notices in October instructing them to obtain sewer permit applications from the sewer commission. Homes will not be allowed to hook up to the sewer system without a permit from the commission. Coughlin said he expects it to cost at least $30-40 per foot to install the connections.

Selectmen asked Tutela and Coughlin to come back in September, after all work has been completed.

The good news for residents tired of detours due to roadwork is that sewer installation is almost complete. Here is the view last week looking down South Main Street.

Harbor color scheme criticized by some residents

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Some Cohasset Harbor area residents have expressed their displeasure to selectmen and Town Manager Mark Haddad over the recent painting of town property along the waterfront.

In June, Peter Roy, whose Kimball's and Atlantica Restaurants are also located on the waterfront, asked the selectmen if his painters, while in the harbor area, could touch up the town pier, jersey-barrier sea wall, and Lawrence Wharf pergola. The selectmen unanimously accepted the gift, however, neglected to ask what colors the town property would be painted.

The oversight turned out to be significant, as the pier, sea wall, and pergola were painted black and gray — what one local resident characterized as "Roy's corporate colors."

"Are you the selectmen and town manager aware of the corporate colors that now encompass the harbor?" Elm Street resident Ham Tewksbury asked town officials (see letter to the editor on page 6). "Please — reconsider Mr. Roy's offer to paint the town black and gray. There's nothing wrong with accepting a free paint job, but we should be getting it to our specifications — not Mr. Roy's."

Tewksbury, a member of the Government Island Study Committee, said he and other residents were amazed at what they called, Roy's "audacity" of painting everything in the harbor area alike.

"It's the attitude of the individual, with the apparent feeling that I don't like the looks of this place, and I'll change it to my liking," he said. "It's the attitude that people are objecting to."

However, he didn't completely absolve the town of any blame. "If anything, I'm being critical of them for not being on top of it...they goofed," Tewksbury said.

"If anything, I'm being critical of them for not being on top of it...they goofed."
— Hamilton Tewksbury, Elm Street

Fellow Elm Street resident Valerie Lipsett also said she was bothered by the painting. "It's very nice to have someone offer to paint the benches and pavilions and trash cans...That's good, we need participation," she said, but added, "I don't see where [Roy has] had any oversight by selectmen or the town manager."

Selectman Merle Brown admitted that the town goofed, but refuted claims that the town is giving Roy free rein. "I can see where people would be concerned that this will be Peter Roy Town, but I don't think that is the case at all," he said. "He's willing to work with us."

Haddad said he expressed the town's concerns over the harbor's conformity to Roy, and reported that the pergola's pillars were repainted white. "We never gave [the colors] a thought," he said. "Obviously now we will."

Haddad also received positive feedback about the harbor work. "For every negative comment I've gotten, I've received a positive one,"

First Parish bell celebrates birthday

A birthday party for the steeple bell of the First Parish in Cohasset, Unitarian-Universalist, will be celebrated Sunday afternoon, Aug. 6, with the playing of the carillon of St. Stephen's Episcopal Church by carillonneur Sally Slade Warner in coordination with the ringing of the bell. The carillon concert will begin promptly at 6 p.m. while the bell tolls, and will end at 7 p.m. with the bell ringing during the playing of the last piece.

The present bell of the First Parish in Cohasset was cast in 1825 by G. H. Holbrook of Medway, Mass. Although a meeting house was constructed on the site of the present structure in 1721, there was no bell until 1761 when a small bell was purchased. Other bells followed, until the present bell was put in place 175 years ago. On Aug. 6, the authentic restoration of the beautiful steeple, completed this past spring, will also be celebrated. A history of the bells will be available for distribution on the Common and at St. Stephen's Church during the concert.

This will be a true birthday party thanks to the generosity of the H.P. Hood Company, who have generously donated ice cream. The treats will be given out to all from under the tree at First Parish during the concert.

A slice of Americana

'Gloryland' makes its triumphant return to Norwell's Company Theatre

By Seth Jacobson
STAFF WRITER

It is an American epic of magnificent proportions, and it will all fit on one stage.

"Gloryland," the original award-winning production returns to the Company Theatre next week. The ambitious show opens Aug. 4 and will run throughout the month.

Gloryland debuted in 1991 and brought home the Moss Hart Award for best original production in New England. Since the first production, the show has seen some changes so those who caught the first performances will be in for some delightful surprises, says director Zoe Bradford, one of the playwrights.

Gloryland is a musical play which takes its audiences through several significant events in American history. It focuses on the people, the fashions, the trends, and the musical styles over the last few hundred years.

But this show is no boring history lesson. It is a musical adventure through time.

"It covers such a vast amount of information," said Bradford. "In a word, I think the whole production is about freedom. It's an adventure. An American experience."

Bradford is one of the founders of The Company Theatre. Her partners include Jordie Saucerman, the co-author of the current production, and Michael Joseph, the theater's musical director. Joseph wrote some original pieces for Gloryland in addition to adapting some of his favorite songs from respective time periods.

"We tried to touch on many of the events and people that had emotional impacts on history."
Gloryland director and writer Zoe Bradford

"I consider this play to be more like a pageant," Saucerman said. "It covers so many different periods of time in America." Saucerman said the production involves more than 80 actors and required the use of about 800 different costumes.

"What I love about Gloryland is that people may come in expecting a big display of patriotism," Joseph said. "But it's a whole different breed of patriotism. It's patriotism rooted in reality. It shows how much adversity this country had to overcome."

The production features many of the heroes, artists and personalities who made America what it is. Within the production, people will get familiar with names like Norman Rockwell, who serves as the narrator of the show, as well as names like Harriet Tubman, Abraham Lincoln, Mark Twain, Amelia Earhart, Martin Luther King,

Still b-b-b-b-bad to the bone

George Thorogood and the Destroyers play the Music Circus Aug. 2

By Seth Jacobson
STAFF WRITER

He is a tough talking, hard playing ambassador of blues music, and he has had his share of hits throughout his years in the music business.

And he is on his way to the South Shore.

Veteran rocker George Thorogood and his band The Destroyers will be bringing their brand of blistering blues music to the South Shore Music Circus Aug. 2.

"I'm always happy to play in Massachusetts," Thorogood said, noting he's had some great experiences playing the Tweeter Center in Mansfield, formerly known as Great Woods. "It's an old stomping ground for me."

Thorogood said he plans on playing a wide variety of tunes at his Music Circus show including hits like "Bad To The Bone," "One Bourbon, One Scotch, One Beer," "Move It On Over," and "I Drink Alone." He said his fans will not be disappointed.

"When I first started getting into music I said to myself 'There's two things that never go out of style; funny and sexy.' I knew I wasn't sexy, so I said I'd try to be funny."
George Thorogood

Thorogood made huge waves during the 1980s with his music, but his songs still get frequent airplay on many area radio stations. Thorogood said these days, he is playing whenever and wherever he can, simply because it's a passion for him.

"I'm taking on everything right now," he said. "It's all about playing live, so I'm saying 'no' to nothing." He added he has been busy playing various festivals and shows around the country with other bands. He said his touring schedule has not been a continuous one.

"I've been playing a week here, and two weeks there," he said of the schedule. "We'll be working into September."

Thorogood said he and his band are always working on new music. Just last year, they released a live album called "George Thorogood and the Destroyers Live in '99," and

Lobster Pot Pie

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

Let's be honest. Most of us would describe pot pies as sodden, overcooked, tasteless, and, well, hardly worth making at home. The truth of the matter is that a good pot pie is just short of heaven — a marriage, in this case, of brightly flavored lobster and vegetable, bound in a thin, well-seasoned sauce, hiding under a rich, luxurious crust. True, lobsters are expensive (although less so at this time of year), and this is not a 10-minute recipe, but after some experimentation in the kitchen, I found the results to be worth both the time and expense.

The first question is, what type of lobsters are best, hard- or soft-shell? I found that hard-shell lobsters deliver 50 percent more meat than their soft-shell cousins, so avoid the soft-shell variety, if possible. The next issue was how to cook them. Because the lobster would be precooked and then heated a second time inside the pie, I was worried about producing rubbery, tough meat. I checked out the lobster stew recipe from Jasper White's "Cooking from New England," and found that White precooks his lobsters by boiling them for 4 minutes. I finally ended up bringing a large pot of water to a boil, adding the lobsters, and then cooking them 4 minutes once the water came back to a boil. The meat was just cooked through and still tender when released.

The next question was how to produce a quick, and easy lobster broth for use in the pie. Again, I took a suggestion from Jasper White and simmered the lobster bodies (once the meat was removed) in a small amount of liquid with a few aromatic vegetables. In 20 minutes, the broth was ready. For the pie itself, I settled on ingredients similar to those I would use in a chicken pot pie except I substituted leek for onion, used cognac instead of sherry for flavoring, and added one tablespoon of lemon juice for flavor. A bigger issue was thickening. I usually use a roux (cooked butter and flour) but I found a simpler, lighter solution by simply simmering the lobster broth with heavy cream until thickened. Now I had a superb dinner dish, one that is both unusual and, to my mind, vastly better than boiled lobster. It is luxurious and brightly flavored with a flaky top crust which marries well with the richly-sauced ingredients below.

LOBSTER POT PIE

If you want to cheat, you can use store-bought pie pastry, but the recipe below is easy to make and vastly superior to the supermarket variety.

To Prepare the Lobsters and Broth
4 lobsters, about 1 1/2 pounds each
1 large onion, roughly chopped
1 large carrot, roughly chopped
2 sprigs parsley, optional
2 sprigs thyme, optional
2 bay leaves
8 peppercorns

For the Lobster Pie
1 recipe American Pie Pastry (see below)
2 tablespoons butter
2 tablespoons olive oil
1 cup leek, finely chopped
2 cloves garlic, minced
1 cup carrots, peeled and cut into 1/4-inch rounds
2 cups sliced white mushrooms
1/4 cup white wine
1 tablespoon cognac
1 teaspoon fresh thyme leaves, minced, or 1/2 teaspoon dried
1 tablespoon lemon juice
2 cups frozen peas (not thawed)

1. Make pie pastry and refrigerate. Heat oven to 425 degrees.

2. Place a large pot (large enough to accommodate the lobsters) two-thirds full of salted water over high heat to boil. When boiling, add the lobsters. Once the water has resumed boiling, cook the lobsters for 4 minutes. Drain and cool the lobsters.

3. Remove the tail, claw, and knuckle meat from the shells, cut into bite-sized pieces, and reserve. Place the four lobster bodies in a large saucepan with the remaining ingredients for the broth and add 1 quart of water. Bring to a boil over medium heat. Reduce heat to maintain a simmer and cook for 20 minutes. Strain liquid and discard solids.

4. Heat 1 tablespoon each of oil and butter in a large skillet over medium heat and, when foam subsides, add leek. Sauté for 5 minutes. Add garlic and sauté for 1 minute. Add carrots and sauté for 4 minutes. Remove carrot/onion mixture to a large bowl. Add 1 tablespoon each butter and oil to skillet and, when hot, add mushrooms and sauté until they release their juices and start to squeak when stirred. Season liberally with salt and pepper and remove to bowl.

5. Add 1 1/2 cups lobster broth and 1/3 cup heavy cream to a skillet and gently boil until the mixture has thickened, about 5 minutes. Add wine, cognac, thyme, and lemon juice and stir together. Pour over other ingredients in bowl (from step 4), add the lobster meat, and stir to mix. Taste for salt and pepper and adjust if necessary. Add frozen peas.

4. Pour mixture into a shallow casserole or deep-dish glass pie plate. Role out pie dough to the shape of the casserole and place over dish. Trim so that 1/2 inch of dough overlaps the edges of the dish. Fold excess dough underneath edges and crimp with your fingers or a fork. Cut three steam vents with a small knife. Place in oven and bake for 20 minutes or until crust is nicely browned. Serve immediately.

AMERICAN PIE PASTRY

To cut the butter into small bits, halve the stick of butter lengthwise with a large knife, rotate the stick 90 degrees, and cut lengthwise again. Then cut the stick crosswise into 1/4 inch-pieces. Leave butter and Crisco in the refrigerator until you need them. Otherwise, they will soften while sitting on the counter.

1 1/4 cups all-purpose flour
1/2 teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon sugar
6 tablespoons chilled unsalted butter, cut into 1/4-inch pieces
4 tablespoons chilled all-vegetable shortening (e.g. Crisco)
3 to 4 tablespoons ice water

1. Mix flour, salt, and sugar in a food processor fitted with the steel blade. Scatter butter pieces over the flour mixture, tossing to coat butter with a little of the flour. Cut butter into flour with 5 one-second pulses. Add shortening and continue cutting in until flour is pale yellow and resembles coarse cornmeal, with butter bits no larger than small peas, about 4 more 1-second pulses. Turn mixture into a medium bowl.

2. Sprinkle 3 tablespoons of water over the mixture. With the blade of a rubber spatula, use a folding motion to mix, then press down on dough with the broad side of the spatula until dough sticks together, adding up to 1 tablespoon more water if dough will not come together. Shape dough into a ball with your hands, then flatten into a 4-inch wide disk. Dust lightly with flour, wrap in plastic, and refrigerate for 30 minutes before rolling.

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

Most people are already familiar with astrological sun signs – those presumed indicators of personality and future. There are, however, much more telling influences, as anyone who has studied astrology knows.

I try to do something a little different with my astrological forecasts. I like to compare astrology with meteorology. Just as meteorologists predict the physical weather – if there will be sun or precipitation – an astrologer can forecast the mental and emotional weather ahead.

A meteorologist tells you whether to bring an umbrella or sunglasses to work. By charting the course of the heavens and the various effects of celestial spheres on the human condition, I can tell you what type of day we are likely to have and how people are likely to react. My goal is to help you be prepared for the week ahead.

WEDNESDAY, JULY 26

At 6:20 a.m. the Taurus moon aligns with Saturn and becomes inactive. A lively Gemini moon takes over at 8:01 a.m., setting a quick pace. This is a wonderful day for vacationing. If you are working, focus on people-oriented projects, sales and promotion campaigns. People will be outgoing, enthusiastic, talkative. An applying alignment of Jupiter/Neptune also affects the day, generating an optimistic mood. Give your time or resources to causes that aid others who are less fortunate. Take quiet time out; you can gain key insights and find new meanings in life.

THURSDAY, JULY 27

Three major planetary alignments make for an interesting day. Jupiter forms a 120-degree contact to Neptune in the morning, and the sun aligns with Neptune and Jupiter in the evening. It means that this day is ideal for vacationing, socializing, enjoying favorite leisure activities. On the other hand, it is best to postpone making major decisions, purchases, commitments. You may not have all the facts. It may be difficult to separate the reality from the wishful thinking. The Gemini moon becomes inactive at 4:17 p.m. Forget your troubles and go for the good times this evening.

FRIDAY, JULY 28

The moon enters emotional Cancer at 9:30 a.m. Zero in on family and domestic matters. Give extra time and attention to loved ones. Be more nurturing and sensitive to their needs. All crafts, gardening projects get the green light. Go on a cooking or baking spree. A polarity of Venus and Uranus may generate romantic fireworks this evening. Take a ride on the love boat.

SATURDAY, JULY 29

This is a weekend that can go either way. Keep it light. Sleep on new ideas and don't take action until next week. A potent Solar Eclipse/new moon will culminate Sunday evening, generating emotional thunderstorms. In addition, the moon continues its travel in the sign Cancer today. Choose your words carefully. People may be moody, hypersensitive. Be sure to take quiet time out for yourself; reflect on and learn from past experiences. Strive for greater spiritual vision.

SUNDAY, JULY 30

The Cancer moon becomes inactive at 8:18 a.m. The final windup to this Solar Eclipse/new moon begins at 9:23 a.m., when the moon enters Leo. The dark side remains in effect until 10:25 p.m., when the new moon culminates at 8-degrees Leo. A harmonious alignment of Mars and Saturn is an asset today, adding an element of stability, focus, patience. Rest and reflection are principal themes. This is a time to let go of old problems and behaviors; forgive and forget past grievances. Clear the decks and start anew.

MONDAY, JULY 31

A Leo moon generates a playful mood, making this day ideal for vacationing, socializing, celebrating. If you are working, projects will come together smoothly. However, a lunar opposition to Uranus, in effect between 2:06-5:06 p.m., may bring unexpected distractions. The green light is on for new starts of all kinds. The planet Mars moves into Leo at 9:21 p.m., remaining there until September 16. A lunar alignment to Venus urges you to kick back and go for the good times this evening.

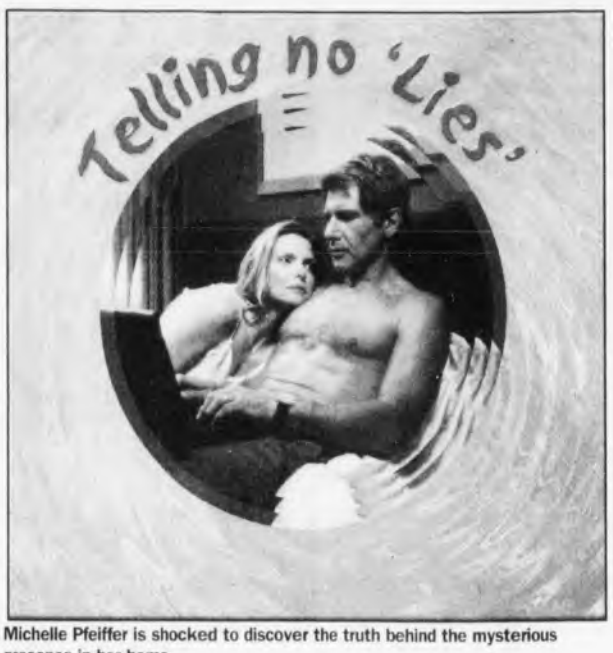
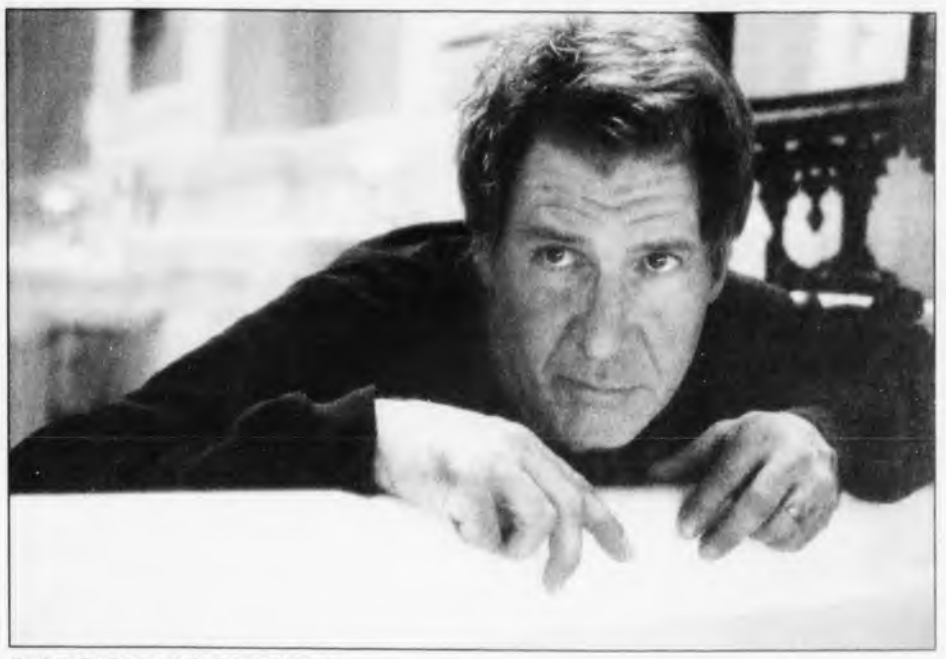
Telling no "Lies"

Harrison Ford talks about his new film, an old one and some future projects

By Ed Symkus
CNC SENIOR ARTS WRITER



Michelle Pfeiffer is shocked to discover the truth behind the mysterious presence in her home.



Harrison Ford stars as Dr. Norman Spencer.

There's no mistaking the incredibly low voice of Harrison Ford — low in both pitch and volume, usually delivered in monotone. And no one that's ever been to one or two or 10 of his films, from "Star Wars" to "The Mosquito Coast," would have any trouble picking out his rumpled, slightly gnarly face in a crowd. The little gold stud in his left ear is at first a bit off-putting, but, hey, even one of the most bankable movie stars in the world, and most likely the only one who's had a spider named after him, has got to have a side he doesn't show onscreen.

His new film, "What Lies Beneath," a nail-biting, often shocking ghost story, in which he co-stars with Michelle Pfeiffer, actually does show a different side of him. That's one of the reasons he took the part.

"First of all I thought it was a well-told, suspenseful, scary movie," he says quietly. "That's something I haven't done for a while. The character appealed to me for its difference to what I have done lately or what I'm known to do. And then there was the opportunity to work with Michelle and [director] Bob Zemeckis. So when this came along it was a very easy decision for me to make."

It was a good decision, as there's little doubt this film, about a possibly malevolent spirit haunting the remote home of a couple whose daughter has just gone off to college, is going to be a smash. But Ford readily admits he hasn't always been exactly on the mark in picking parts. Case in point: last year's grimly romantic "Random Hearts," a film which disappeared quickly, of which most critics and viewers at the time of its release said, "It doesn't work."

"That depends on what you mean by 'doesn't work,' " says Ford. "If you mean commercially, that it doesn't make a lot of money, I'm never surprised. I've had my share of good luck and I expect to have my share of fair luck ... and medium luck and bad luck. But I am not displeased with that film, and I wouldn't characterize it as saying that it doesn't work. I would say that it didn't make a lot of money.

"I'm always concerned about an audience reaction," he adds. "But I don't expect the breadth of that audience is the same for each kind of film. 'Random Hearts' is a very grown up film with a kind of difficult core to it. I expect that 'What Lies Beneath' will be appreciated as a real entertainment, and will thus cross over a lot of genre barriers, a lot of age barriers. And I think people love scary movies, especially when they can intellectually participate and emotionally participate to the extent that it's allowed by this film."

Ford would love to go on and on about his current film, but there are things about many others — both new and old — that need some straightening out. For instance, will he ever again play either Indiana Jones or Jack Ryan? What's the story with new revelations about Deckard, the character he played in "Blade Runner?" And, forgetting films, how did he come to have a spider named after him?

As far as Jack Ryan, the CIA agent he played in the film adaptations of Tom Clancy's "Patriot Games" and "Clear and Present Danger," Ford says, "I've given up on that character."

Asked why, he quietly but firmly says, "There are any number of reasons. But if I'm not going to do it, there's no sense to be talking about it. I'm just simply not doing it."

He brightens up considerably on the subject of the whip-cracking Professor Jones.

"I hold a very strong ambition to do another Indiana Jones," he says. "I'd love to work on that character again, I'd love to work with Steven [Spielberg] on it again and with George [Lucas]. I keep hearing there's [going to be] a screenplay by M. Night Shyamalan, but so far I have no personal knowledge. I know that we've talked about it and that he's expressed an interest in it. But I haven't yet caught up with either Steven or George to ask them whether all of this is in fact true."

Over the past couple of weeks, there have been murmurs from "Blade Runner's" director, Ridley Scott, and co-star, Sean Young, about the fact that Deckard, the cop who was chasing down renegade replicants, was actually a replicant himself. Ford sets the story straight.

"I knew at the time that Ridley had an ambition for Deckard to be a replicant," says Ford, with a hint of annoyance about that memory bobbing up in his voice. "But when we first started, I said that I didn't like that idea. I thought the audience needed to have one person onscreen that they are assured — either emotionally or through context or dialogue — is a real human being. So that they can have an emotional relationship with some character that's on the screen. And Ridley said, 'Yeah, yeah, yeah.' And I always thought that he had grudgingly accepted my point of view. Later on, as the film developed, there were certain things that he did that I knew were indications of his point of view that Deckard was a replicant."

"And I argued against them," he adds, referring to, among other things, a scene that showed his eyes glowing, in a very similar manner to the eyes of the replicants. "But, of course, it's a director's medium, so Ridley prevailed. But he continues to say that he thinks it's one of the best films he ever made. It's too bad that the actor playing the lead role had no idea what was going on. I thought I did at the time."

It's again time to cheer Ford up, so he's asked about the spider business.

"That is true," he says, apparently surprised to hear the subject brought up. "Some entomologist named a spider after me out of gratitude for some work I'd done with the Natural History Museum. I think it's called Harrison Fordus Californius, or something like that. I would not actually know it by sight."

Star struck

Don't think for a second that it's just female fans out there in the audience that go all mushy when they think about hunky Harrison Ford. The "problem" also occurs among those who work with him.

Asked what she thought of Ford as a man, Michelle Pfeiffer, who plays his wife in "What Lies Beneath," initially said, "I think that we both genuinely really liked each other and respected each other as actors, and I think we trusted each other. And then we just showed up and did our work."

Pushed a bit to expound on that, she smiled, then giggled, and admitted, "I was very taken by his power. He has this sort of innate, powerful presence. And there's some ... I haven't run into it a lot; I remember Sean Connery had it. It's like when they walk into a room, they fill up the entire room. And I think I was initially a little intimidated by that. But it went away pretty quickly.

A slice of Americana

Elvis Presley, Marilyn Monroe, and John F. Kennedy.

The play deals with issues like slavery, the Great Depression, the Vietnam War, and the Civil Rights movements of the 1960s.

"We tried to touch on many of the events and people that had emotional impacts on history," Bradford said. She added one of the most climactic and dramatic scenes of the production is a re-enactment of a Civil War battle accompanied by a dramatic original orchestral piece composed by Joseph.

Bradford said she chose the character of the renowned artist Norman Rockwell to narrate the play for various reasons.

"He had an interesting and colorful life," she said. "A lot of people thought he was just a wholesome and pure guy, but he went through his share of hardships. He had three different marriages, so we wanted to show how that weighed on his career. But the bottom line is that (Rockwell) embodies what America hoped it could be."

"He represents America," Saucerman added. "You think of someone like Norman Rockwell and you immediately think of an 'all American.' He has always been a household name, and even if someone isn't familiar with art, they still know who he is. A lot of his stuff represents looking at America through the eyes of a child, and that worked out well for this production."

When it comes to who actually wrote the play, Joseph, Saucerman, and Bradford all agree it was a group effort.

"It was a total collaboration between the three of us," Saucerman said.

"(Saucerman) and I have been working together for the past 20 years," Bradford said. "In 1989, (Saucerman) and I were at Disney World, and we went into the American Pavilion over at Epcot Center. By the time we left, we were so inspired that we were shedding tears. We both agreed we needed to write a musical that would focus on American history, so that's what we did."

After Bradford and Saucerman wrote the actual text of the play, Joseph put his musical stamp on it, and he also helped with some of the formations of various scenes.

"The three of us are such a tight group," Joseph said. "We all wore different hats in writing the play, but it really was a group effort."

All three agree writing the play took a lot of research.

"It was all about making things historically accurate," Bradford said. "So yes, it did take a lot of time to develop."

They're also in agreement that Gloryland is a unique production in the sense that it is bigger than life.

"It's not too often that an epic like this is presented," Bradford said. "And the music in the play is also very unique."

"So many styles of music are covered in this production," Saucerman said. "If someone doesn't like a certain style of music contained in the play, there's bound to be another style they do like contained within the production. There's something for everyone."

"It's really an eclectic mix of songs," Joseph said. "Hearing all these styles of music in one sitting is something that audiences don't see too often." Joseph said some of the specific musical styles within the show include Folk, Gospel, Spiritual, Rock, Pop, and even Rap.

"What we tried to do with the music was give the audiences musical flavors of each time period we covered," Joseph added. "The music in the play really supports what's going on. The music is the final stamp on what a given scene just said."

"I get the chills listening to a lot of the musical pieces in the play," Saucerman said. "It sets the time period and the mood of a scene. Sometimes the music is haunting, sometimes it lifts you up, and other times it just makes you think."

Gloryland has all the ingredients to entertain audiences and the producers say audiences will come away from the production with different feelings.

"It will make you proud to be an American," Saucerman said. "And it will remind people of not only the good times, but of the hard times this country has gone through."

"People will come away with a very positive message," Joseph said.

"By watching this play, audiences will come away with the realization that we did not just set out to make a production about just flag waving. People will see that we as Americans have dealt with many hardships like war and prejudice, but now, we as a country can look back on all those events and see how we've learned from our mistakes in the past."

For more information on Gloryland or to get tickets call The Company Theater at (781) 871-2787 or visit them online at www.companytheater.com.

Still b-b-b-b-bad to the bone

he said he is always thinking of new things to do.

"I get new ideas all the time. Working on music is like an addiction. I'm always thinking of new stuff."

But Thorogood said his style has not changed, despite the fact he is always thinking of new ideas. He still offers the same style of gritty, energetic Rock 'n' Roll music he always has.

"My style hasn't changed," he said. "In fact, I feel it's gotten better. I was always trying to do back then (the 1980s) what I'm doing now."

Thorogood said he feels his music has stood the test of time because of two main elements.

"When I first started getting into music I said to myself 'There's two things that never go out of style; funny and sexy.' I knew I wasn't sexy, so I said I'd try to be funny."

Thorogood's love for comedian Jackie Gleason definitely helped him in the development of his songs, because many of his recordings have a humorous element to them.

"I like using tongue-in-cheek humor in my songs," he added.

Of course, Thorogood has also had his share of musical influences.

"There were two guys who really influenced me," he said. Jokingly, he continued "I think their names were something like Mick Richards and Keith Jagger."

In addition to listening to the Rolling Stones, Thorogood said he always admired the music of Chuck Berry, John Lee Hooker, Howlin' Wolf, Jimmy Paige, Jimi Hendrix, and other innovative blues musicians.

Some people may also be interested to know Thorogood once tried out to be a professional baseball player, but that experience didn't last too long.

"I went to spring training one year," he said. "Then I just went home and bought a guitar. That was that. My only regret was that I didn't start playing guitar at an earlier age."

But when Thorogood did start writing and playing his music, he took the world by storm. Thorogood said he used to just go and play live on street corners because he loved performing so much.

"Playing music is a necessity for me," he said. "And it always will be."

Flexible loan program helps buyers renovate, update older homes

By Carol Bulman, President
CONWAY FINANCIAL SERVICES

Carol Bulman

You've found it - the home of your dreams - almost. It has the correct number of bedrooms, a nice yard and it's within your price range. There's just one thing (or maybe two or three): The kitchen needs updating, the heating system needs to be replaced, or perhaps you'd like to add a family room. After making your down payment, there won't be any money left over to make these renovations.

With the inventory of homes for sale still tight, many buyers are opting to purchase a house that requires some repair work. In essence, a renovation loan allows you to add the amount necessary to renovate your house onto your mortgage, thereby giving you the extra cash necessary to make the almost-perfect home into the truly perfect home. One of the best programs for renovation financing is the Federal Housing Administration's 203(k) Renovation Loan. This program offers the advantages of an FHA loan (3 percent down on sale price plus renovation costs, flexible qualifying, and all borrowers' investments coming from a gift, etc.) along with a renovation component. This government-backed loan helps thousands of people who might not qualify under other programs to realize their dream of home ownership. CFS has a division devoted entirely to the FHA 203(k) loan product. Here's how a rehab loan works: Once you've found your "almost perfect" property, it's a good idea to meet with a mortgage officer who can help you through the process. The first step in a renovation loan involves having written estimates prepared by a 203(k) consultant to substantiate the projected cost of making repairs. The lender will use this estimate as a basis for prequalifying the buyer for a loan that combines the purchase price and the cost of making repairs, as well as allowable closing costs. For example, say a buyer wants to purchase a $100,000 home with $25,000 in renovation costs. Using a rehab loan, the buyer would be qualified based upon $125,000 minus a down payment as low as 3 percent on the total sale price, renovation costs and financeable closing costs.

With the inventory of homes for sale still tight, many buyers are opting to purchase a house that requires some repair work. In essence, a renovation loan allows you to add the amount necessary to renovate your house onto your mortgage.

Beginning at the closing, the rehab loan starts to operate much the same as a construction loan. At the closing, the borrower would make his or her down payment on the total of the sale price, rehab costs and financeable items. The lender would extend the remainder of the funds needed to purchase the home from the seller. The $25,000 for renovations, however, would continue to be held by the lender in escrow. From then on, as the renovations are completed, the lender will send the HUD 203(k) consultant out to your property to verify completion of the work. Upon verification of satisfactory completion, money held by the lender will be released to pay the contractors. So, before you pass on that "almost perfect" property, consider discussing a renovation loan with your mortgage officer. Call CFS at (781) 681-9400 or (888) 831-1181 to obtain a free copy of HUD's 203(k) brochure entitled: "Rehab a home with HUD's 203(k)."

Crescent announces top brokers

Michael Richardson, president, Crescent Realty Group, announced the top brokers for June, Marybeth Muldowney for sales and Michelle Burt for listings.

"To have achieved this distinction after only one month of association with Crescent is truly a major accomplishment," said Richardson of Muldowney. "She has exceeded our most optimistic goal."

Speaking on her own behalf, Muldowney acknowledged the support of her family and colleagues. "Changing your place of employment is very traumatic," commented Muldowney. "The folks at Crescent have been tremendously welcoming and very supportive. I am very happy here."

Laura Crosby, vice-president, congratulated Michelle Burt by recognizing her perseverance, skill and team spirit. "Michelle is hard working, skillful, and at all times dedicated to the task at hand. How fortunate we are to have Michelle with us," she added.

"There is no substitute for dedication and hard work," commented Bob Salamone, director of education. "Add to this mix a strong education and experiential background and it can't be beaten. Both these realtors have it all."

Fabulous foliages for color throughout the season

Green thumbs up

Part 1-Bronze and burgundy tinted plants

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

As the latter half of the growing season approaches, the riotous colors of spring and early summer wane and although there are still many star performers to be found in the well-planned perennial border, foliage often becomes the predominant player. Plant foliage plays a key role during the intermissions, as well, as nearly all gardens have peak bloom periods interspersed with temporary lulls. The color, texture and overall appearance of a plant's leaves should be paramount when selecting plant material for a perennial border, as a majority of perennials bloom for only a few weeks, while the foliage is likely to be prominent for 6 months or more.

With the growing popularity of gardening and the increasing demand for new plants, innumerable, attractive new cultivars are being developed and introduced which offer a multitude of flower and foliage colors from which to choose. Tremendous strides have been made in creating plants whose tinted foliages offer a colorful alternative to our reliance on flowers for a dramatic, long-lasting display. Dozens of familiar plants now boast splashy, variegated cultivars with leaves of green, white and yellow. Diverse shimmering, silver-gray plants unify our borders while dazzling yellows and golds, blues, and handsome, deeply-hued bronze, purple or burgundy foliages are readily available to paint a colorful tapestry even when flowers have faded.

Recent additions to my own garden include a wide variety of both woody and herbaceous plants which display richly-colored foliage and I have become particularly fond of those plants which offer shades of bronze and burgundy. The addition of just a few deeply-tinted foliages to a sea of varying shades of green leaves creates a dramatic contrast which may serve as a focal point or a backdrop to highlight other flowers and foliages in the garden. In combination with leaves of gold, silver or blue, the effect is especially stunning.

Tremendous strides have been made in creating plants whose tinted foliages offer a colorful alternative to our reliance on flowers for a dramatic, long-lasting display.

Annuals lead the way for providing a readily available source of these handsome, richly-tinted leaves. A newly planted terra cotta-colored container holds an elegant combination of an annual purple fountain grass (Pennisetum 'Rubrum') and deep chocolate-colored sweet potato vine (Ipomoea 'Blackie') interplanted with the soft, silver foliage of a gazania and variegated licorice plant (Helichrysum). The gazania produces dramatic, bright gold, daisy-like flowers with a deep bronze band around the center, which is highlighted by the surrounding complementary foliage, and a similarly gold-tinted lantana. Other annuals which offer bronze, purple or burgundy foliage include various cultivars of celosia, coleus, begonia, hibiscus, amaranthus, and New Guinea impatiens.

The family of herbs are not without their purple-leafed representatives. Several annual herbs, including varieties of basil (Ocimum) and perilla, provide richly-tinted, aromatic foliage which are elegant when combined with golden oregano or the silvery leaves of lavender, sage, santolina or artemisia. Few plants rival the beauty of bronze fennel (Foeniculum) whose delicate, ferny, anise-scented foliage adds marvelous textural contrast to the border. In addition, its elegant stature, showy, bright yellow flowers resembling its relative, Queen Anne's Lace, and its ability to attract the caterpillars of the Black Swallowtail butterfly, make it an invaluable component of any garden.

Perennial plants offer a number of stunning choices for dramatic, dark foliage. The family of coral bells (Heuchera spp.) has been extensively hybridized to produce dozens of handsome purple- and bronze-leafed varieties, 'Palace Purple' having been one of the first of these introductions. Other delectable cultivars include 'Chocolate Ruffles,' 'Plum Pudding,' 'Bressingham Bronze,' 'Stormy Seas,' 'Velvet Night,' 'Ruby Veil' and 'Ebony and Ivory.' Many of these are grown primarily for the foliage, but a few of the newer cultivars have equally lovely flowers. I prefer to grow these bronze beauties in part shade to maintain their deep, lustrous color which may bleach out or turn brassy in full sun.

Other darkly-tinted additions to my perennial border include a handsome spurge, Euphorbia dulcis 'Chameleon,' which displays lime green flower bracts in May and June and seeds about the garden quite prolifically and a purple-leafed Joe-Pye weed called Eupatorium 'Chocolate' which displays fluffy white umbels in late summer. Although somewhat invasive, the tall, bronze-leafed loosestrife, Lysimachia ciliata, is an attractive addition to the back of the sunny border while the handsome, deeply-colored foliage of Cimicifuga 'Brunette' or 'Hillside Black Beauty' add an exquisite touch to the shady garden. There are several spectacular summer bulbs to add to the display including the richly-colored, giant tropical leaves of cannas and the dark foliage of several new dahlia cultivars such as 'Bishop of Llandaff.'

For woody specimens, look for 'Crimson King' maple, a magnificent redbud cultivar called 'Forest Pansy,' purple-leafed plums, and numerous varieties of Japanese maples which include dwarf threadleaf cultivars and taller ornamentals like 'Bloodgood.' There are several barberries which provide deep-hued foliages including 'Crimson Pygmy,' 'Rose Glow,' and 'Royal Burgundy' and an elegant Weigela, 'Wine and Roses.' A personal favorite is a purple-leafed smokebush, Cotinus 'Royal Purple.'

The addition of any of these richly-tinted plants to the garden provides a season of colorful contrast to the sometimes monochromatic green of the typical home landscape.

IN BRIEF

Dunn earns professional degree

Jean Dunn

Jean Dunn of Rockland, a local realtor, recently had conferred upon her the designation, GRI, Graduate REALTOR Institute by the Massachusetts Association of REALTORS president Fred Meyer.

The GRI designation signifies 90 hours of advanced in-class real estate education. REALTORS who have passed the GRI examinations are recognized as having attained one of the highest professional levels in residential real estate.

Dunn, a Rockland school committee woman, is affiliated with Crescent Realty Group, a full service real estate company serving the entire South Shore.

Attention, first time homebuyers

Neighborhood Housing Services, an approved First Time Homebuyer Counseling Agency, will be holding an accredited and MHFA certified first time homebuyer's workshop in collaboration with Continental Funding Corporation Wednesday, July 26, and Aug. 2. The workshop will be held at The Whitman Council on Aging, 16 Hayden St, Whitman, from 6 to 9 p.m. Attendance at both workshops is mandatory to receive your homebuying certificate which is required by all lenders to qualify for the many different mortgage options such as the Mass Housing Finance Agency, Soft Second Programs, down payment and closing cost grants and other special first time homebuyer financing options.

Neighborhood Housing Services is a non-profit organization dedicated to assisting first time buyers through the homebuying process. The staff at NHS is unique in their approach to obtaining down payment and closing costs assistance as well as rehab grants for their clients, which are available throughout the entire South Shore area. Don't miss this opportunity to find out how you or someone you know can buy a home with little or no money down.

The agenda will be comprehensive and individualized. The focus will be on the many changing aspects of homebuying, including how to locate a property within your budget, how to make an offer, and determining the best mortgage program for your needs. Advanced registration is required and space is limited. A $10 refundable registration fee is required.

Call Debbie Kidd at (617) 770-2387 for more information and to register for this workshop.

MAR scholarships available

The Massachusetts Association of Realtors (MAR) Charitable and Educational Foundation has announced the availability of a new series of educational grants for individuals pursuing a professional designation or degree program in real estate or another industry-related field.

This year, up to ten $1,000 educational scholarships are available through the MAR Charitable & Educational Foundation's 2000 Scholarship Fund. To be eligible to receive a scholarship, students must be a resident of Massachusetts pursuing a college-level educational degree program or professional designation (i.e. GRI, CBR, CIPS, CRS, CCIM, CPM, CREA, SIOR, LTG) in real estate or another industry-related field of study.

Applications are welcome from both MAR members and the public, however trustees of the Foundation, members of their immediate family, and relatives of the association president are ineligible to receive scholarship funds.

Qualified applicants must complete a one-page application form. Selected applicants also may be required to appear before the Foundation's Scholarship Committee to complete a personal interview.

Real estate licensees and others interested in learning more about the MAR Charitable and Educational Foundation's 2000 Scholarship Fund may contact their local association of realtors or the MAR Customer Service Department at (800) 725-6272 to obtain a brochure and application form.

Prime Real Estate

A riverfront community

The North River was one of the most famous places in the world for shipbuilding from the late 1700s through the early years of the 1800s.Today the North River is used for recreational boating with small boats, canoes and kayaks.

With the famous North River as its focal point, nine homes were built in this premier riverfront community. This 4000-square-foot home is nestled on 4.9 acres of professionally landscaped grounds and abuts more than 14 acres of conservation land. A Campbell-Smith designed, 10-room, five-bedroom expanded Cape, this home has the finest quality construction and meticulous detail. It is bright, open and airy with a marriage of both the indoors and outdoors. Great for entertaining is a 40-foot fireplaced kitchen and family room with skylights and double sliders to the deck to sit and view the river. French doors lead to a den with detailed molding, lighted built-ins and beautiful handmade gas fireplace.

There is a first-floor master bedroom suite boasting a large master bath with palladium windows for beautiful light, complete Jacuzzi and steam shower. A finished basement with fireplace and walkout sliders adds another level of living. In this very special home awake to the sounds of birds and all of nature's splendor and view the boats as they pass along the historic North River.

Information is current as of July 14, 2000. For information on specific mortgage programs, call the lender. Rates, points, and programs are subject to change daily and cannot be guaranteed. Points include discount fees and origination fees. Quotes = rate+total points/APR (annual percentage rate), calculated as follows: conventional 20% down and $100,000 mortgage; jumbo 20% down and $252,700 mortgage. FHA 3%-5% down and $100,000 mortgage. Most quotes are for 30-day lock-ins, but can vary. Maximum conventional loan amount is $252,700; jumbo loans are in excess of $252,700. ARM--adjustable rate mortgage. ARM rates are quoted as follows: rate +total points/APR (type of ARM program is listed in parentheses). LTV--loan to value. MI--mortgage insurance. NA--not available. NQ--rates not quoted. Lenders, to be listed in this paid advertised column, call 480-905-8000 or 1-800-CNS-8525. Mortgage rates and programs are updated online daily. Negative reactions on chewing gum

By George Hobica
COPLEY NEWS SERVICE

Q. I refer to your recent Q and A about bringing "lots" of chewing gum to Singapore for a teen-ager as a gift. I think that you should also have told your readers that the import of chewing gum into Singapore is illegal and if caught, you can have the stuff confiscated, and may face a fine or jail. I think a few packs may be OK, but anything more is sure to raise eyebrows.

I imagine if those folks took your advice and "imported" big boxes of chewing gum for their teen-age Singaporian friends they'd be really mad at you when they got out of prison. And, Singapore is the cleanest city I've ever been in.

Why would you suggest that people bring an item to Singapore that is capable of helping to dirty up the environs? Come on George, rethink that answer!

A. Who knew that chewing gum would create such a tempest! I got a lot of negative reaction on this one.

Well, folks, here's the scoop: According to Debra Hecht of the Singapore Tourist Board, who apparently gets asked about this topic more than she'd like, "It's perfectly legal to bring chewing gum for personal consumption into Singapore, but bringing it in for commercial resale is frowned upon. Chewing it in public is fine, too, as long as you don't litter."

You can't, however, buy chewing gum in Singapore, she says, because the city's subway cars were being jammed by kids who'd stick used gum on the doors.

I'm certainly not encouraging people to litter, to bring in cartons of the stuff, or even to chew gum, nor do I think Singapore's chewing gum sale ban is Draconian.

As Hecht adds, "To keep things in perspective, you can't buy chewing gum in Disney World, either, simply because it's one of the world's great cleaning nuisances."

By the way, Hecht herself brings gum whenever she travels to Singapore as gifts for her friends there.

Q. On a recent trip to Los Angeles, I rented a car from Thrifty Car Rental through a consolidator on the Internet at an excellent price. I had given my approximate time of arrival as 1 p.m., but, due to weather conditions, we did not arrive at the rental agency until 6 p.m. the same day. I was informed that my "confirmed reservation" for the rental was canceled per company policy since I was over two hours late. The best they could do was another car at a substantial increase in cost.

After much haggling, I agreed to an increase of about $60 per day for five days. Nowhere, in any of the "confirmations" I received, did it mention the "confirmed reservation" was for a two-hour period only and that after that it is canceled.

Finally, the car rental company refunded the difference, but stated that they did so for customer relations only. Have you heard of anything like this before?

A. Good for you for standing your ground. Most car rental agencies do have a two-hour policy due to the large number of no-shows in the car rental business, so thanks for allowing me to remind readers about this. However, if you put your flight number on the car reservation, the agency will monitor your flight's arrival time and honor your original price no matter when you arrive.

So, it's essential that you give them flight info when you book. The Web site should have made this policy clear when you reserved your car.

Q. I am 6 feet 2 inches, and usually ask for an exit row aisle seat for the extra legroom. On occasion, the airline will have a seat available but more often than not there are none available. Often, the people I see sitting in the exit seats were after me in the check-in line and yet they got an exit seat.

Is there any way to register a profile with the airlines so that when I make a reservation I am assigned to an exit row? It is particularly grating to spend several hours in a cramped seat while someone of very small stature is enjoying all the extra space in an exit row seat.

A. I'm 6 feet, too, and I've often thought of bribing smaller people in those rows to give them up, but have never worked up the nerve. I also find that often off-duty airline employees get those seats, and in a way it makes sense (I mean, who would you want operating the doors in an emergency — a nervous first-time flyer or a flight attendant)?

So, the passengers behind you in line may be airline employees, or they may be connecting from other flights and pre-qualified for exit row seats when they checked in for their originating flight (you need show, in person, that you're old enough and big enough to sit in exit row seats for safety reasons).

There's also a third possibility: many airlines, such as US Airways, give these seats in advance to their superflyers — the ones who rack up thousands of miles a year — who have already registered their exit row "qualifications."

Have a travel question? George can be reached via e-mail at georgehobica(at)aol.com, or by writing to this newspaper.

Towns get Greenbush audience with Cellucci

By Alice Coyle
ACOYLE@CNC.COM

It didn't take long for Scituate and Cohasset town officials to catch the governor's attention.

Just a day after the boards voted to send a joint letter requesting a meeting with the governor to air the towns' rail concerns, Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, gave officials the word that Gov. Paul Cellucci will meet with them.

Hedlund said he's concerned that the governor does not realize the uniqueness of the Greenbush line, that he assumes the project faces the same issues dealt with along the other two Old Colony lines — Plymouth and Middleborough. While the other two lines opened for service in 1997, Hedlund said the reason Greenbush has been held up is the environmental problems unique to the corridor.

New state law means stiffer penalties for party hosts

By Dan Gravel
DGRAVEL@CNC.COM

Proponents of a newly passed piece of legislation hope their efforts will make sure adults in the state pay the price for hosting a party where underage drinking takes place.

The Social Host Responsibility bill, which is awaiting Gov. Cellucci's signature, has been in the works since 1997 and seeks to ensure that an adult who "knowingly and intentionally" supplies alcohol to minors can be held criminally responsible and can face fines of up to $2,000, one year in prison, or both.

"Hopefully this will be effective in curtailing parents who serve alcohol to minors. It doesn't correct the problem as much as we would like, but it sets a new threshold," said Richard Shire, the public policy liaison for state chapter of Mothers Against Drunk Driving. "It raises the bar for adults and lets them know they are doing something illegal. The biggest problem I see is the policing of it."

While Shire said the bill does not get to the root of the problem — which he believes is youthful addiction — he is taking a wait-and-see approach and is pleased with what he considers to be a good first step.

"It will make people pay attention to their responsibilities when they do host a party."
— Police chief Brian Noonan

The bill comes after a lengthy battle and effort waged by a Marshfield father who was forced to endure the untimely death of his son.

"I didn't do this for myself," said Don Smith. "I did this for young kids and caring parents who care what happens to their sons, and for teenagers who should not be sucked into a false sense of security....[Parents] have no right to put other people's kid in jeopardy."

Smith was referring to a tragedy which occurred on June 22, 1996, when his 18-year-old son Greg tried to drive home drunk after attending a party in Cohasset to celebrate his graduation from Thayer Academy. But he never made it to his driveway.

Greg was killed when his car struck a tree on Summer Street in Marshfield at 3:20 a.m. only a short distance from his home. At the time of his death his blood alcohol level was .19, according to the medical examiner. The level was the equivalent of drinking 10 beers for someone of his weight.

The party Greg had attended on the night of his graduation was at the Cohasset home of John Lennon, who stood trial in 1997 and was found not guilty on nine counts of providing alcohol to minors and one count of contributing to the delinquency of a minor.

Smith's determined pursuit of the Social Host legislation resulted from the outcome of the criminal trial.

"There was plenty of evidence produced," he said. "The fact that alcohol was supplied, the atmosphere of adults playing drinking games with kids. Because of the present law you have to personally hand an individual a drink [to be

Children's museum proposed for former Osgood School site

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

A request for proposal (RFP) could be sent out by the town to look into the possibility of including a children's museum into reuse plans for the former Osgood School on the corner of Sohier Street and Ripley Road.

The project would create a two-level, 6,000 square-foot early-childhood learning center, at the now-vacant site. According to the project's draft executive summary, the South Shore Children's Museum would ideally be built along with the new town library at the abandoned school. Though the museum and library would remain separate entities, the two organizations would collaborate with each other, along with the nearby South Shore Art Center to "encourage unique education, cultural and/or arts opportunities."

Though the museum and library would remain separate entities, the two organizations would collaborate with each other, along with the nearby South Shore Art Center.

The project is the brainchild of Leah Taylor Roy, who hopes to "open a child's mind" through hands-on learning opportunities. According to Linda Shropshire, a representative for Roy, she visited the children's museum in Acton and thought a similar museum would be a good idea for Cohasset

Patience Towle, the chairman of the Paul Pratt Board of Library Trustees, said the library board approached Roy after hearing her express interest in the project.

"She had already expressed interest to friends that she was looking to enhance childhood development," said Towle. "We heard she wanted to do something along these lines in the South Shore. So we went to see her and asked if the space [at the Osgood School] would be suitable."

Feral cats

To reduce the risk of exposure to zoonitic diseases carried by cats such as rabies, cat scratch disease, toxoplasmosi etc. and reduce potential property damage, the control of feral cats is imperative. In an effort to control these nuisances the Cohasset Board of Health establishes this regulation.

1. Upon the written complaint of three or more citizens, the Board of Health in conjunction with the town's Animal Control Officer (ACO) shall perform an investigation to determine the validity of the complaint. If the complaint is considered valid, the board shall request the ACO to trap the offending cats.

2. When the ACO suspects that there is a feral cat problem, he may, with the concurrence of the health agent, initiate a trapping program without a complaint from residents.

3. If a cat which is privately owned is trapped and the owner cannot be immediately identified and returned, the owner, upon claiming the animal must pay for the cost of its apprehension, feeding and care in accordance with a fee schedule developed by the ACO.

For a copy of the complete regulation contact the Cohasset Board of Health office at 383-4116.

Recycle oil filters, antifreeze, batteries

Used oil filters, antifreeze and batteries can be recycled by bringing them to the Cohasset Recycling Transfer Facility on Cedar Street.

"We have been successful in providing for the recycling of used oil filters, antifreeze and batteries by Cohasset residents," said Recycling Committee chairman Arthur Lehr. "We urge everyone to separate and recycle these items rather than throw them away."

In addition to these materials, Cohasset residents may also bring the following to the RTF for recycling: newspapers, white paper, junk mail, plastic bottles, aluminum, steel, cardboard, glass (separate by color), and cans (which should be cleaned out). Paint is accepted, but only on designated days. A fee is required for dropping off: tires, household appliances, household furniture and other miscellaneous bulky materials.

Beechwood Cemetery graves are available

Gravesites at the Beechwood Cemetery are now available for purchase on a pre-need basis to residents and former residents who resided in Cohasset for a period of one continuous year.

The cost per grave is $725 for residents and $1,000 for former residents. Grave purchases are limited to two gravesites in any cemetery under the jurisdiction of the Town of Cohasset.

Anyone wishing to inquire about purchasing graves should contact the D.P.W. office either in person or by phone, 383-0273.

Cohasset man praised after helping cleanup vandalized church

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Robert Gledhill gave himself an unusual early 50th birthday present. There were no sports cars or exotic vacations — just the inner contentment of a job well done.

It was Gledhill, the owner of R. W. Gledhill Vinyl Siding in Cohasset, who volunteered his time and services to help cleanup a North Shore church after it was vandalized with profane and satanic messages written in black spray paint last week.

"It was wonderful to see something of that spontaneous generous nature," said the Rev. Gene Tully, pastor of St. Teresa's Parish in Billerica. The parish center was vandalized sometime between 9:30 p.m. Sunday, July 23, and 6:30 a.m. Monday, July 24, when it was discovered. Spray painted on two sides of the building, including the windows, were quotes from "death-metal music" such as "Kill all Christians," and "Give Me Alcohol Extremities Instead of Proofless Christianity." Tully said upside-down crosses, pentagrams and other satanic symbols were painted, as well as unprintable phrases.

"There used to be the 'seven things you can't say on TV' routine, Tully said referring to a famous George Carlin comedy act. "Well they got all seven of them,".

Gledhill heard about the vandalism Monday night and decided to lend a hand. He said as soon as he heard it involved vinyl siding, he decided it would be a good opportunity to show his sons "what charity was all about."

"It was wonderful to see something of that spontaneous generous nature."
— the Rev. Gene Tully, pastor of St. Teresa's Parish in Billerica

Gledhill, his 21-year old son Tucker, and foreman Sean Saich made the drive up to the Catholic church in Billerica Tuesday morning, and had the vandalized siding off by 9:30.

"We had the stuff ripped off in half an hour, it was just so disgusting," Gledhill said. "What was painted on the church was just awful."

The crew of three replaced the 800 square feet of siding by 3:30 p.m. that afternoon. "We just knocked it out," he said.

"You would never know anything happened," said Tully.

The siding was donated to the job by Wolverine Siding and Harvey Industries, but it was Tucker who supplied the energy. "They [the people at St. Teresa's] got a kick out of him. He was full-go all the time," said Gledhill.

"They were really super nice people," Tully said.

Gledhill turned 50 this past Monday, as his unexpected fame peaked. He said the Catholic Church's newspaper The Pilot had contacted him for a story, as had the Lowell Sun, and channels 5 and 56. For Gledhill, the thanks he received has made a terrific birthday present.

"There was a constant flow of people just saying 'Thank you' to us," he said. "I haven't felt this good in a long time.

"I gave myself a birthday present."

But Gledhill's charity has been long evident to Cohasset. It was Gledhill who volunteered to install siding on the town's Little League field hut, the high school football field's press box, as well as the school's soccer garage. He also put siding on the Sunrise senior housing complex off King Street, which won the National Award for Excellence in New Construction from Wolverine Siding.

The Nichols Road resident has been putting siding on buildings since he was 14, and has run his 10-man operation for the past 15 years.

Gledhill doesn't seek publicity for his good work, and says he actually considers it "fun."

"I'm a successful guy, I have a lovely family and a beautiful wife — it makes me feel good," he said. "It's just my nature I guess."

Billerica police have no substantial leads in the case.

Area jittery over West Nile virus

By Mary Ford and Seth Jacobson
MFORD@CNC.COM

The West Nile Virus is out there, but so far it has not shown up on the South Shore.

Still, in some area towns — including Hingham — dead crows are being sent away to be tested for the virus, which can cause inflammation of the brain and can be fatal in some cases.

Hingham executive health officer Bruce Capman said the health department picked up a dead crow on Green Street on Monday, after a resident called it in.

Test results are due back today or Friday, he said.

Cohasset health agent Dr. Joseph Godzik said Tuesday there have been no dead crows reported in Cohasset.

Last year, seven people in New York died as a result of the virus. No cases in humans have been reported in Massachusetts.

A little over a week ago, dead crows — which were infected with the West Nile virus — were found in Jamaica Plain and Hopkinton.

Capman said crows have been identified as a host of the virus.

According to the Centers for Disease Control, mosquitoes become infected when they feed on infected birds and can then transmit the West Nile virus to humans and animals while biting to take blood. The virus cannot be transmitted from person-to-person.

State Department of Public Health spokesman Roseanne Pawelec said it is only a certain group of people who could be at risk for the West Nile Virus.

"There's only a small percentage of the population that is at risk," she said, "and those people include the very elderly and people with compromised immune systems."

Capman said there is no need for people to panic.

"People should carry on with their daily routine," he said. "But be aware and protect themselves.

"We'll be watching any developments closely."

Pawelec said the department of health is receiving lots of dead birds from all over Massachusetts. She said those birds are sent off for testing at the State Lab Institute in Jamaica Plain.

"Since last Friday, we have received over 200 birds of all species," Pawelec said. "In fact, we have received so many species of them that we're restricting all testing at this point to crows."

Pawelec said the State Lab Institute reported that after testing the 200 birds, "they did not find any further evidence of the West Nile Virus." She said the only birds which turned up positive for the disease were the ones which were found in Jamaica Plain and Hopkinton.

In Weymouth, six dead birds were found, according to the town's health agent Richard Marino. All of those birds were shipped off to the New England Wildlife Center, where a courier of the state picked up the samples for testing.

Marino said none of the tests performed on the birds have turned up positive for the West Nile Virus — so far. He also said six dead birds is not an unusual number for a town as large as Weymouth.

Plymouth County Mosquito Control assistant superintendent Ray Zucker said he has not heard of any other birds found on the South Shore as of Monday.

"I've heard rumors of dead birds in other (South Shore) towns but I haven't heard anything official yet," Zucker said. However, Zucker said he has received 6,754 complaint calls regarding "nuisance mosquitoes" during the past couple of days.

Zucker said his department, like the one in Norfolk County, has a regular mosquito spraying program in place.

"We have a catalog of numerous breeding sites that we spray," he said. "But this year it's been a double whammy because we've been spraying for West Nile and EEE." He added the same spraying techniques are used in fending off both diseases.

"West Nile is not worth spoiling your summer over because it can be avoided with very simple precautions," Pawelec said. "And still, the virus has only been found in two communities (Hopkington and Jamaica Plain). If and when we find it in other communities, we will make recommendations for ground spraying within a two-mile radius. People should also know that West Nile is here to stay, but again, it can be avoided by taking simple measures."

Pawelec said those precautions include wearing mosquito repellent with the DEET chemical in it, avoiding areas where mosquitoes dwell in large numbers, and wearing long pants and long sleeved shirts when outside at dusk or dawn. She added people should also be checking their own back yards for signs of mosquitoes which include standing pools of water, and pools of water located in gutters, old tires, and wading pools.

Pawelec said symptoms of the West Nile Virus are very mild, but the disease could be indicated by a mild fever, a rash or a headache.

Any resident who finds a dead crow should call the health department at 383-4119. Officials explained the bird must have visible eyes and have no signs of maggots or flies, and no signs of damage to the body suggesting trauma.

If the Hingham crow being tested is found to be infected with the virus, Capman said more aggressive treatment of catch basins and spraying in the area will be conducted.

AROUND TOWN

NEWS IS WELCOME!

Hello Cohasset. How is everyone managing with all this rain and gray skies? I am starting to feel a little moldy but hopefully soon the sun will shine. We have a pretty quiet week in terms of news, please remember to send any bits of news along to me. Birthdays, which the kids love to see about their special day, anniversaries and any special bit of information that you have to share with someone. Any and all happenings around town are more than welcome.

OFF TO TABOR

Had some great news from Tabor Academy this week. Jefferson Barrett, son of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas S. Barrett of Cohasset will be entering Tabor Academy this fall as a member of the freshman class. Tabor is located in Marion, Mass. and it offers new students an opportunity to experience life onboard S.S.V. Tabor Boy, Tabor's 90-foot schooner. Currently, Jefferson is participating in Tabor's "Orientation at Sea" program, which brings students, faculty and Tabor student crew members together for six days of sailing, exploring and learning along the coast of Maine. What a great experience for you Jefferson! Good luck on your upcoming school year!

BIRTHDAY WISHES

We have a few Birthdays to mention. Elizabeth Hassan, recently celebrated her 18th Birthday. Hope you had a great day, Liz. Also, Taylor Lessard celebrated his fifth birthday in true "Pirate Style." Happy Birthday, Taylor!

CINDERELLA SMITH

I had a great phone call from Beth Deveney the other day. The Deveney sisters are at it again and they, along with many children have put together after lots of hard work, a fantastic musical called, "Cinderella Smith!" The musical is being performed at the Cohasset Middle/High School on Tuesday, Aug. 8 and Wednesday, Aug. 9. On Tuesday, the performances are at 10 a.m. and 7 p.m. and Wednesday, they are at 1 p.m. and 7 p.m.. Tickets are $8 in advance and can be purchased at the Recreation Department at the town hall or, they can be bought at the door for $9. Beth, Grace and Sara are three amazingly talented young ladies, and together with all the children and families who help behind the scenes, the show is bound to be a smashing success!

FARMERS' MARKET

Don't forget to head to the Farmers Market each Thursday, held on the town common! This is your chance to buy many wonderful items and socialize a little with your friends and neighbors while the children enjoy the same!

Garden club

GARDEN CLUB

The Community Garden Club of Cohasset recently was awarded two state awards and one national award at the annual meeting of the Mass. Federation of Garden Clubs, including the "Club of Distinction Award" for scoring a high number of activity points in its district.

The "Margaret K. Bell Newsletter Award" from the Garden Club Federation of Massachusetts was awarded to the club for its newsletters done by Sherry Brumbelow.

Other awards included the "Robert H. Rucker Award" from the National Council of State Garden Clubs, for landscaping design and the 'State Award" from the Garden Club Federation of Massachusetts, for civic development and beautification. Both awards are for the seaside garden at the Cohasset Lighthouse Keeper's Cottage.

The club has worked for seven years to design, establish and maintain the gardens, an ongoing community-development project. Sometime in the future the club envisions the garden finally surrounding the Lighthouse Keeper's Cottage. The cottage has been preserved for the use of the community and the terrace and gardens have been established for the public enjoyment. The club's gardens are part of the work many citizens and organizations are contributing for the enrichment of this national historic side.

TENNIS RECORD

Natalie Beukers, Kelsea Hindley and Alison Costa, all of Cohasset, piled 52 tennis balls onto their instructor's racket during a break from a recent lesson.

CONGRATULATIONS!

Don't forget to share your good news! I can be reached by e-mail at jenpiep@yahoo.com or the old-fashioned way, by mail at 622 CJC Hwy., Cohasset!

Local Boy Scouts hope to fly high

Four members of Troop 28 have sights set on Eagle Scout award

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Four members of Boy Scout Troop 28 in Cohasset are nearing completion of requirements for their Eagle Scout badges – a feat remarkable in itself, but made even more special because of the troop's small size. As part of their requirements for the badge, each scout must get his project publicized. The Cohasset Mariner will feature these four scouts — Kenneth Portanova, Andrew Dennis, Will McArthur and Alex Schmidt — and their projects over the course of the next few weeks.

After months of abuse and general neglect, the island in west Cohasset — bordered by Forest Avenue, Forest Avenue Extension and Jerusalem Road — will get a make-over, courtesy of 16-year old Alex Schmidt.

Alex is a member of Boy Scout Troop 28 in Cohasset and is taking on the project as part of his chase for the highly coveted Eagle Scout badge.

Alex is one of four scouts in his troop currently working on his Eagle Scout project. Only one member has received an Eagle Scout award since 1996, said scoutmaster Phil Lehr, who earned his award in 1971. Merle Brown, a selectman and former scoutmaster, said the last time multiple scouts in the troop were working on Eagle Scout projects was more than 10 years ago.

Alex said his parents suggested the project to him after the parcel of town-owned land was used as the staging area for some heavy equipment during recent sewer installations in the area.

"One of my neighbors had mentioned it also," he said. He brought his proposal to Town Manager Mark Haddad, and received his blessing. "He was thrilled that something was going to be done to it," Alex said.

"It's going to look really nice," said Haddad of the project.

Alex plans to plant flower beds on the island's corners, set a compass rose in the middle, and lay down three-stone walkways leading to it. He also hopes to plant evergreen trees to hide the utility poles on the parcel.

As part of his badge requirements, Alex has to plan the project, and organize a team of volunteers, including other scouts, raise money for it, and see it through completion.

Alex plans to plant flower beds on the island's corners, set a compass rose in the middle, and lay down three-stone walkways leading to it. He also hopes to plant evergreen trees to hide the utility poles on the parcel.

"The project has to be at least 50 hours of work," said Brown. "But some can include up to 300, 400, 500 hours [of work]. Their role in an Eagle Scout project is not just to do it, but to show leadership, get other scouts to help out, do fundraising, work with not only parents, but adults."

Once the physical work is done, according to Lehr, the scout must complete a workbook and bring it before the local boy scout council. "It includes ranks, letters of recommendations from his family or church or local leaders saying they deserve the Eagle Scout rank. [They have got to have] pictures of the project, different functions they've attended over the years, such as scout camp…It's quite a feat to put this book together."

Since Troop 28 was established, 63 Cohasset boys have been awarded the rank of Eagle Scout. All of their names are listed at the Pilgrim Cooperative Bank on South Main Street.

So far, Alex has finished one flower bed and is starting work on the other two. The stone for the walkway was donated and delivered by a customer on his newspaper route. He has received some donated flowers, but still has a lot more plants to buy.

Though he has until his 18th birthday to complete the badge, he hopes to finish the project by the start of the school year. He is entering his junior year at Cohasset High School.

Alex has been involved with the Scouts since he was 11, and has fought off the distractions that tend to claim the scouting careers of so many of his contemporaries, such as sports. "I really like the adventure trips…It's really great that I get to do so many trips."

If interested in contributing to the project, feel free to contact Alex either by phone, or at his house at 726 Jerusalem Road.

Responsible hosts

Don and Donna Smith of Marshfield faced any parent's worst nightmare when their son, Gregory, 18, never made it home from a graduation party in Cohasset. Gregory was killed on June 22, 1996 when his car struck a tree not far from his home at 3:20 a.m. His blood alcohol level at the time of his death was .19 — the equivalent of drinking 10 beers for someone his weight.

Although devastated by the accident, the Smiths decided to take positive steps to try to prevent a similar tragedy from befalling another family. Over the past three years, they have fought hard to get the new Social Host Responsibility Law enacted that should give party hosts pause before they tolerate any underage drinking. The bill is waiting for the governor's signature and is expected to be signed into law next week.

Based on a Pennsylvania law, the new social host act makes it a crime to intentionally allow minors to drink on your property. It expands restrictions in the current law that calls for fines and imprisonment for "knowingly furnishing alcohol to a minor."

As Don Smith said, "The bill says no one can host a party and knowingly and intentionally allow minors to drink. You'd be as guilty as if you physically handed a kid a beer."

The law is not intended to punish parents who are out of town at the time or unaware that under-age drinking is going on.

There are some parents who think it's OK to allow minors to drink as long as they are supervised. They figure kids are going to drink anyway, so they might as well do it where they are safe. Some even confiscate all the car keys and promise the kids will stay the night.

But mixing alcohol and minors is dangerous. The teenager could have another car key hidden away or get violently ill from the alcohol.

At a party in Pennsylvania, a father took away all the keys. But a fight broke out and one of the kids who was drunk was hit by a car and killed after he wandered out into the street.

The father who hosted the party was convicted under that state's social host law.

Cohasset Police Chief Brian Noonan says if parents want to allow their own child to have a drink in their own home, that's their business.

"But they cannot and should not allow other minors to illegally drink alcohol. Too many bad things can happen," he said.

Nothing is going to bring Gregory Smith back. That night four years ago the Thayer Academy graduate had his whole life ahead of him. He received a scholarship to Norwich University and planned for a military career.

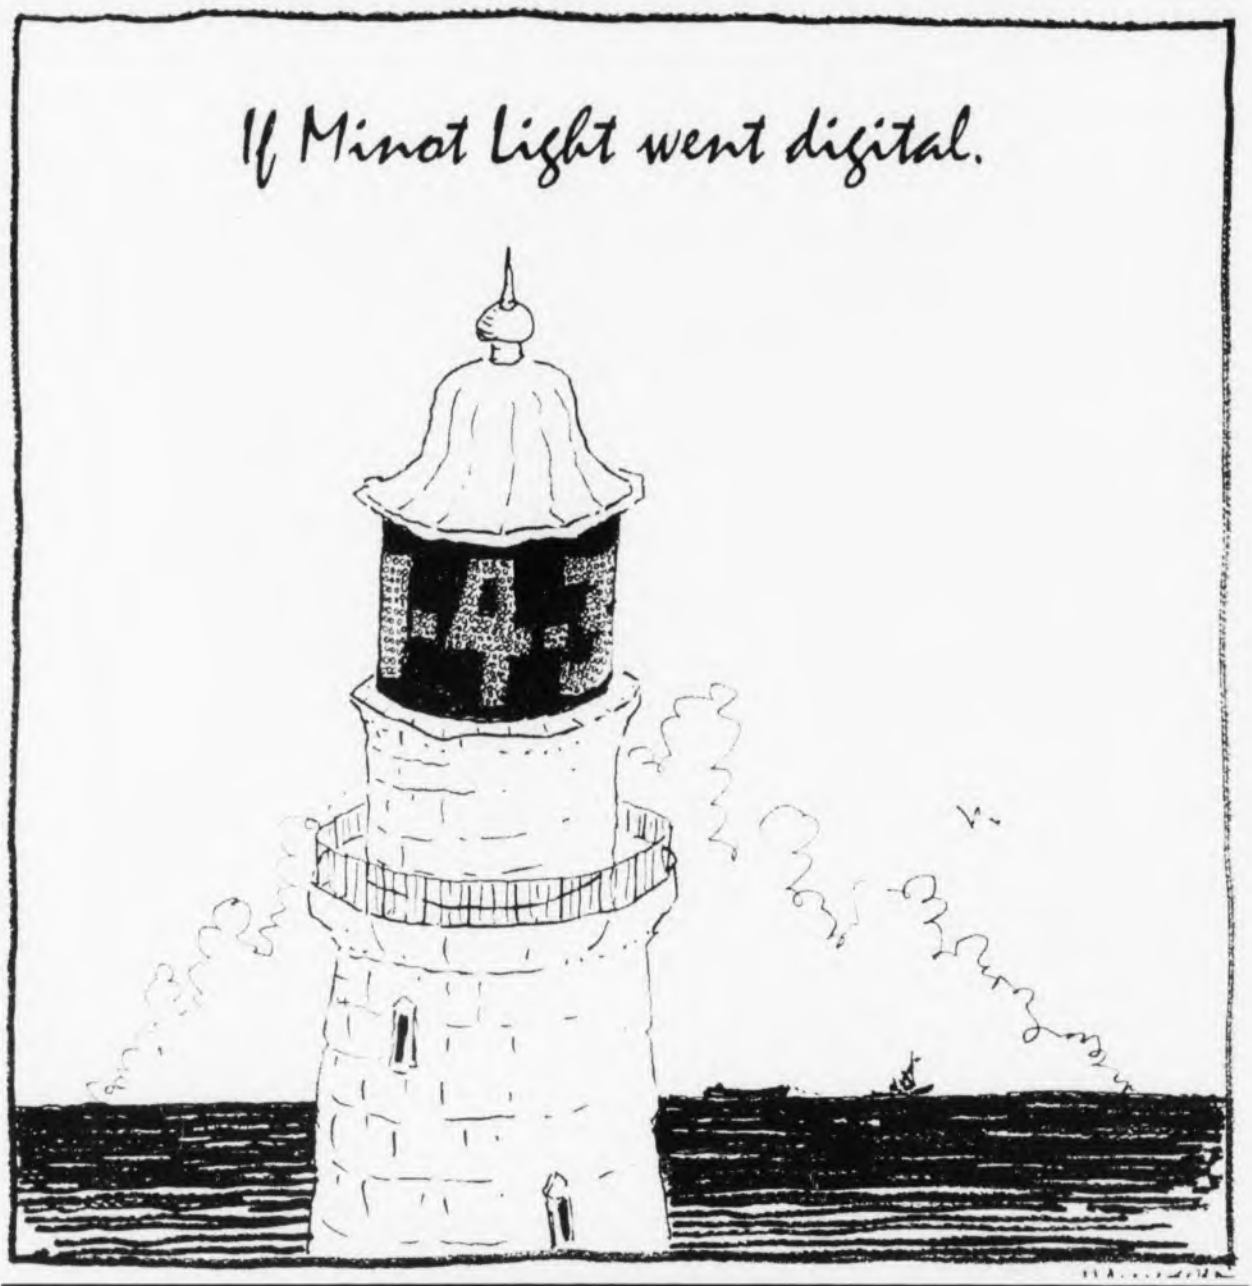
"He was going to fly jets," his father said.

While Greg Smith's death was needless — it doesn't have to be meaningless.

Let's hope the new law sends a clear message to all parents of teenagers — that allowing minors to drink is a crime — and if you do, you can be punished for it.

The new law will go a long way toward making party hosts more responsible for the behavior of their teenaged guests. However, their responsibility should be a mutual one with parents of their guests who are urged to continually instill in their children the dangers and consequences of underage drinking.

It is a responsibility we all share.



LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

A snow job

TO THE EDITOR:

When my children were small, we would walk to the center of town. A center which thrived with the Red Lion Inn, banks, a drug store, and a grocery store that delivered — if you can imagine. At the harbor end, we had Hugo's Lighthouse restaurant. These places served the people of Cohasset and the tourist, quite effectively. When their original owners had control of the businesses, service to the town folk was primary. When others ascended to ownership, smallness and service to the community became ugly epithets. When I left the Elm Street area, I lost the treasure of being able to walk to the center. The sadness stayed with me many years.

Our town has accomplished much as a unified community. We have tried to do things which benefited everyone in the town. We united behind the Art Center. We united behind the Community Center Nursery School and we united behind educating our children. However, now in the center of town and the harbor, the general thrust is to attract tourism.

I also remember when Elm Street was widened, and improved for safety reasons close to 30 years ago. Now we have the CRC (Cohasset Revitalization Corporation) a non-profit corporation, saying we really must improve the streetscapes, with flowers, road-narrowing peninsulas, canopied trees, and brick sidewalks (lest we forget the grant the CRTF tried to obtain). This all is a snow job — which will not melt with warm weather.

Dump with a view

TO THE EDITOR:

Peter Roy and Gerde Odelheide are soon to experience the truth of the adage "No good deed goes unpunished!" Their motives, methods and tastes will be impugned, and the perpetual naysayers will be in full bray..

Because of the great natural beauty of the town, we tend not to notice that much of the public space is sadly neglected, despite the efforts of the DPW within its limited budgets. We are living in a dump with nice views. We should be grateful to public-spirited citizens who propose to spruce it up, and should forgive them for being newcomers.

I don't see anything in the revitalization plans that supports the current mantra that we are heading toward cutesy Nantucket ambience with myriad craft shops replacing residences, and surely there is enough review process to roadblock any serious misdirection.

Anyway, the continual struggle by the town's nickel-nursers to emasculate the spendthrifts will slow down any constructive activity.

Let's give positive support to the revitalization concept, trusting to common sense (and review processes) to filter out crassness, commercial skewing, and excessive cutesyness. Politically incorrect colors can always be repainted, but at least the repaint will be on recent paint instead of on surfaces that have needed paint for decades.

VOTES

The following votes were unanimous and are not recorded by legislator below. Senate vote on House 4866 as amended: The bill, dubbed the Community Preservation Act, would allow some cities and towns to raise money for land conservation projects by voluntarily hiking real-estate taxes up to 3 percent. It will also levy a new $20 surcharge on transactions at the Registry of Deeds, and pool the cash - an estimated $30 million a year - to match whatever money towns decide to put into preservation programs. Senate vote 39-0.
Senate vote on House 130 as amended: The bill will deprive wanted fugitives of a slew of state benefits, including their drivers licenses, unemployment checks and welfare benefits. It would also allow police officers to search state databases for the names and addresses of people wanted in the courts. Senate vote 39-0.
Senate vote on House 4511: The bill would set aside an amount of state funds to help pay for the building of a national World War II memorial in Washington DC. Vote 37 - 0 with two not voting.
Senate vote on House 4847: The bill would establish a Child Fatality Review Team to investigate the deaths of each person under age 18. Vote 37-0 with two not voting.
The following votes are recorded below. S2082 - The bill would create a new crime of "criminal harassment." The new law would make it illegal to stalk someone or harass them by telephone. Proponents said the bill is needed to fix flaws in the state's current stalking law, which now allows someone to be convicted of stalking only if they have also threatened the safety of their victim. Opponents said it unfairly compromises freedoms of speech and movement. Vote passed house on a vote of 132-21, with five not voting.		Y

Missing names sought for vets' memorial

Below is a list of names that the Memorial Overseers Committee (with the help of Austin Ahearn) has come up with. This list is the names of those who served in the military from Aug. 14, 1945 to Dec. 31, 1946, from Cohasset. These names will be added to the war memorial at Veterans Memorial Park. At the same time the inscription at the top of the memorial will be changed to reflect the end of the Second World War to be Dec. 31, 1946. Also, there is a list of those who served from Dec. 7, 1941 to Aug. 14, 1945, who were missed when the memorial was first put up.

The committee would like to hear from anyone who might know of anyone else the committee missed. At that time these names will be added. The requirement to have a person's name on the memorial is: the person has to have lived in Cohasset at their time of going into the service.

Call the selectmen's office at 383-4105 or Austin Ahearn at 383-0529 if you know of anyone the committee may have missed.

Call the selectmen's office at 383-4105 or Austin Ahearn at 383-0529 if you know of anyone the committee may have missed.

Those who were missed who served from Dec. 7, 1941 to Aug. 14, 1945:

Vito Conte, Walter D. Ackerman, Mathew A. Brown, George H. Childs, Roger Crafts, James P. Infusino, James A. Robinson, Noel A. Ripley.

Those who served from Aug. 14, 1945, to Dec. 31, 1946:

Summer reading

The statewide summer reading program, "Open Books, Open Frontiers", is still open to school age children until Aug. 15 at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library. There is still time to bring in your reading lists and receive one of the following fabulous prizes; 3-D rainbow glasses, Frisbees or deep sea creature and rocket key chains.

A "Make Your Own Sundae" party will be held for all those who participated in the program this summer on Thursday, Aug. 17 at 1 p.m. It's never too late to join the reading fun!!

Final celebrity

Police Chief Brian Noonan is the last Cohasset celebrity storytime guest reader for the summer. Chief Noonan will make his library debut on Tuesday, Aug. 8 at 7 p.m. He will read the book, "Officer Buckle & Gloria" by Peggy Rathmann. It is a very humorous look at a police officer and his relationship with a rather active and expressive dog named Gloria. It's sure to be a crowd pleaser.

This program is free and open to all Cohasset residents. It is in conjunction with the state-wide reading program funded by the Mass. Regional Library Systems.

Internet tutoring

Individual Internet tutoring will be available on Monday and Tuesday mornings, 9 a.m. to noon beginning Aug. 7 and continuing through the month of Aug..

Two teachers — one senior volunteer and one student — will be on hand to help new Internet users.

Pre-registration is necessary. Sign-up sheets are available at the library now.

Positive feedback

TO THE EDITOR:

I am the individual who has actually performed some of the various projects Mr. Roy has undertaken in the harbor area for the town and am responsible for keeping them maintained in the future at no cost to the town, as offered by Mr. Roy. I am writing this letter in response to the disheartening criticism published in the "letters to the editor column" in the Cohasset Mariner.

Myself and the people working with me did not merely slap a coat of black and gray paint on the mentioned areas. We took great care and time to execute the duties on areas that were in dire need of attention.

The dock on Margin Street has had the same dull, faded coat of paint on it for decades. To complete this project, power washing was necessary to remove years of dirt, oil stains and mildew. Several hours of sanding was performed followed by a coat of primer and the application of a finish coat of a neutral color gray, designed to blend in with the existing colors of the area (i.e. stone walls, hotel, dock at Lawrence wharf). Several planks that were buckling were nailed down and countless nail heads were reset so as to prevent a foot or any other item from being snagged while traveling down to the floats. Handcrafted flower boxes were installed to beautify the overall look of the dock.

The Pavilion at Lawrence Wharf also received the same preparations for its painting work. Several rotten trim boards discovered while power washing were replaced. The cement columns were covered with areas of moss growth. After being cleaned, masonry block filler was applied to prevent further cracking and to seal the concrete before coating with finish paint. Large amounts of bird droppings were removed from the rafters that support the roof. Several pigeon nests were also removed. The original wire mesh installed to prevent pigeons from nesting under the pavilion had rusted where it was fastened. This caused it to pull away from the wood allowing birds to enter the eaves. To correct this, the wire mesh was re-fastened to prevent pigeons from nesting.

The benches on Lawrence Wharf were missing wood slats, as were the trash baskets. All paint on the benches was chipping and peeling. These were replaced. There existed an exposed electrical box, which protruded from the ground where young kids jump from the wall into the harbor waters. An electrician repaired this. Between the sidewalk and the grass lawn of the wharf there is a row of granite posts forming a barrier between the road and the grass lawn. Two such posts were broken so that only a five-inch stub protruded from the ground. These broken sections were dug out and replaced with new granite posts.

Two steel 50-gallon drums used as trash barrels sit next to the phone booth. These barrels were one-part sky blue with Sandy Beach Association decals on them and one part rust where all the blue paint had once been. To correct this, flaking paint was scraped off the barrels, the barrels were sanded then painted with a coat of black rust inhibitive paint as was a rusted water and electric utility pole situated at the top of the ramp utilized by local fishermen.

While it is true that the cable wire protector is yellow on the newer poles along Border Street, the one at Lawrence Wharf was weather beaten rusted piece of galvanized steel. This was wire brushed and painted. A close observer will notice that the yellow wire covers are a newer product made of plastic. These were not painted. As it turns out, the gray painted guide wire protector is more visible now than it was in it's past condition.

Guardrail all along Border Street received a new coat of white paint. The rusted orange and brown steel bars that support these wooden guardrails were scraped down, wire brushed and then treated with a new coat of white paint. The approximately 150 feet of chain link barbed wire fence along the boat yard at Border Street received attention by way of an application of white colored metal formulated paint.

Another project undertaken was the addition of two new benches of identical style to accommodate the one sole bench (which was also repaired and painted) located at the seawall in front of Memorial Park. This was intended to accommodate more than just two people to sit and enjoy the view of the harbor.

During the time spent working on these various projects, I had the opportunity to engage in conversations with many of the townspeople walking around the harbor area and while I will admit that an occasional person passed by and grumbled his or her displeasure, there was an overwhelming majority of people who felt that the improvements looked great and only heightened the beauty of the area. One individual remarked that Lawrence Wharf was a Town landmark of historical nature and that the paint job would attract more people to visit that area.

While I can understand the editors at the Mariner feeling compelled to publish the opinions of the townspeople on events, in this case criticism, I can not excuse them for not doing what most other newspaper editorials regard as protocol, that is to publish the opinions of both sides of an issue. This would not have been difficult to do considering that many of the staff live right here in Cohasset. A person would only have to walk down to the harbor and ask someone to offer their opinion. I believe that if this was done, much of the positive feedback that I've heard could have been shared with the Mariner. Unless of course, positive feedback was not a desired input.

Minority control

TO THE EDITOR

I, like most pro-train people just hate to see our town take all "our" rights away with these silly town meetings. I have written letters to every other paper in the area, asking the towns of Hingham, Cohasset and Scituate for an open ballet and a binding vote on the train. The minority town meeting people do everything to stop that idea. They know if that happened they would lose all control over the train. It's time we stop the minority control of our towns and go back to the American way.

Don't transform it

TO THE EDITOR:

The reason most people come to Cohasset is because they like it the way it is. Now they come and change it as soon as possible.

Why not leave it and add to it, not transform it, such as financing the new library or an all-year swimming pool or a skating rink? That would please everyone.

Support appreciated

TO THE EDITOR:

The Cohasset Benefit Committee would like to gratefully acknowledge the generous contributions of the following local businesses to the Eleventh Annual Children's Hospital Tennis Tournament: The Good Sport, Hunneman Coldwell Banker, Stop and Shop, Maggie's Corner, Shaw's, Cohasset House of Pizza, Papa Gino's, The Red Lion Inn, Atlantica, Emily Malone Catering, Dunkin' Donuts, The Village Butcher and Deli, JJ's, French Memories, Atlantic Bagel, Curtis Liquors, Bernard's, Cohasset Tennis and Squash Club, and Kinnealey Meats.

We realize that these businesses are asked to donate to many different causes throughout the year, and are so appreciative of their support for this charity event.

As well, the following neighbors offered their tennis courts for use in the tournament: Mr. and Mrs. Peter Roy, Mr. and Mrs. David Keefe, Mr. and Mrs. Peter Goedecke, Mrs. John Roy, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Higgins, Mr. and Mrs. Guy Rebuffe, Mrs. and Mrs. Joel carpenter, Ms. Esther Williams, Mr. Richard Chute, Mr. and Mrs. Michael Hurled, Mrs. Fran Wakeman, Dr. and Mrs. Shapur Naimi, Mr. and Mrs. Gary Vanderweil, Mr. Chum Steele, Ms. Debbie Thaxter, Mr. and Mrs. Bruce Herzfelder, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Walsh, Mrs. and Mrs. John McBride.

The tournament depends on their hospitality, and we are indebted to them for their continued generosity.

A heart-felt thank you to all mentioned here, and to the many other friends who helped behind the scenes. Any further donations of the benefit of Children's Hospital can be sent to 18 Bancroft Way.

Hollywood charm

The Cohasset Mariner townonline bulletin board received the following response to the proposed Cohasset revitalization project:

Please leave our town alone. Do not change Elm St at all. Haven't we done enough to our streets lately? Just try to drive through or within the town. Leave well enough alone. We have many more pressing projects that the town people need to be implementing, such as providing low-income housing, providing a new Senior Center etc. We need to worry about people's needs first, not the beautification of an area that already has New England charm enough to bring Hollywood to our town in the past.

Second fiddle

A lot of ink was spilled last week reporting breathlessly that George Double-U had chosen — the envelope, please! — Dick Cheney to be his running mate for vice president in the fall election and what it means to the Republican ticket.

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

Next week, a lot of valuable air time that could better be devoted to a Shannon Tweed movie will be used up when Algore announces his pick for second place on the Democratic slate and the pundits tell us what the choice means for the future of Western civilization.

Then whoever wins the presidency will devote at least part of his time to devising something not too difficult nor too important for the vice president to do when he is not off in Air Force II attending the funeral of the leader of a Third World country with three or more oil wells.

As far as I can see, the only roles that are authorized by the Constitution for the vice president are to preside over the Senate — trying not to nod off over the gavel — and to check the President's pulse every now and then in case the Second Lady has to redecorate the White House.

The only roles that are authorized by the Constitution for the vice president are to preside over the Senate — trying not to nod off over the gavel — and to check the President's pulse every now and then in case the Second Lady has to redecorate the White House.

"This isn't worth a pitcher of warm spit," said John Nance Garner, the vice president under FDR when he learned that it would still cost him a nickel to ride the subway.

Actually, I am told, old Cactus Jack didn't really say precisely those words, but used a more colorful scatological phrase that had to be cleaned up before his press secretary could pass it on to the family newspapers of the day.

Even our own John Adams, the Braintree lawyer who became the first vice president, found out early in the game that not even a Founding Father could escape the ennui that went with the No. 2 spot in the administration of George Washington.

"My country has in its wisdom contrived for me the most insignificant office that ever the invention of man contrived or his imagination conceived," he said upon learning that Abigail would still have to do family laundry.

Vice President John C. Calhoun found boredom in the office, too, and resigned to run for the Senate where the action was.

At least one vice president, Richard Johnson, who served under Martin Van Buren, was said to have spent his entire vice presidency (1837-1841) serving beer and sour mash at his public house in Kentucky, occasionally checking obits in the Washington press to see if his services were needed. They weren't.

Johnson, an independent cuss who married under common law a slave woman and raised their kids as if they were white, was so widely disliked that the Democrats refused to renominate him or pick anyone else for vice president in 1840. Luckily, the Whigs won, or we might have had to struggle without a vice president.

That's what they thought of the office in those days.

And that's why the story is told of the woman who had two sons. One ran away to sea. The other stayed home and became vice president. Neither was ever heard from again.

Anti-handgun group hosts first meeting

A group of local women who attended the Million Mom March in Washington, D.C., want the momentum to continue. That was just the beginning, according to local organizers, who hosted a forum on gun control July 20 in Cohasset.

Several residents attended the event, along with guest speaker John Rosenthal from Stop Handgun Violence and Mary McDonald, sister of author Patrick McDonald, who, in his book, "All Souls," chronicled their family's torment when a younger brother accidentally murdered his friend. Ted LeClair, Democratic candidate for the state senate, spoke to the gathering along with Cohasset Police Det. Rick Grassie and state representative candidates Garrett Bradley, Michael Holden and Walter Murray.

"There are more regulations on the manufacturing of toy guns than real guns," Rosenthal told the gathering. For those in Cohasset who may have been thinking, "not in Cohasset," they were surprised to learn there are 200 gun licenses in Cohasset and there have been several gun dealerships located in the area. Det. Grassie also explained that the number of guns is not limited when a license is issued to an individual.

LeClair said that if only one thing emerged from the inaugural meeting, it was the need for parents to ask more questions. "It's fine for parents to know that when their child is visiting a friend, their parents will be home. But we need to go further with our questions. We need to know if there's a gun in the friend's home, and if so, whether that gun is stored in a secure place, that it is not loaded and that there is a lock on the gun. The goal is not to get rid of legally-owned handguns, but to stop the violence from occurring," he said.

"I came to this meeting because I wanted to support what you were doing. I came home really energized to become more involved," Cohasset resident Kathy Ofsthun said after the meeting.

The Cohasset group will host a second event in September to generate increased awareness and resources to influence the upcoming elections as they relate to anti-handgun legislation.

Annual GOP cookout

GOP Chairman Janet Fogarty of Cohasset announced that the annual Cohasset cookout will be held Sunday, Aug. 27, from 4:30 to 7 p.m. at the seaside estate of Ted and Julie Guild.

All South Shore residents from Norfolk, Plymouth, Barnstable and Bristol counties will be invited to attend to hear GOP leader Francis Marini (R-Hanson) discuss the report from Beacon Hill.

Another highlight will be a tribute to Molly Kochkeppel, who recently announced she was retiring from the Patriot Ledger after several decades of service. She will be honored for assisting a myriad of good causes through her reporting.

Open to the public reservations are required and may be made by calling Janet Fogarty (383-3036), Polly Logan (383-0031), Julie Guild (383-6443) or Edythe Ford (383-1648).

Responsible hosts

Don and Donna Smith of Marshfield faced any parent's worst nightmare when their son, Gregory, 18, never made it home from a graduation party in Cohasset. Gregory was killed on June 22, 1996 when his car struck a tree not far from his home at 3:20 a.m. His blood alcohol level at the time of his death was .19 — the equivalent of drinking 10 beers for someone his weight.

Although devastated by the accident, the Smiths decided to take positive steps to try to prevent a similar tragedy from befalling another family. Over the past three years, they have fought hard to get the new Social Host Responsibility Law enacted that should give party hosts pause before they tolerate any underage drinking. The bill is waiting for the governor's signature and is expected to be signed into law next week.

Based on a Pennsylvania law, the new social host act makes it a crime to intentionally allow minors to drink on your property. It expands restrictions in the current law that calls for fines and imprisonment for "knowingly furnishing alcohol to a minor."

As Don Smith said, "The bill says no one can host a party and knowingly and intentionally allow minors to drink. You'd be as guilty as if you physically handed a kid a beer."

The law is not intended to punish parents who are out of town at the time or unaware that under-age drinking is going on.

There are some parents who think it's OK to allow minors to drink as long as they are supervised. They figure kids are going to drink anyway, so they might as well do it where they are safe. Some even confiscate all the car keys and promise the kids will stay the night.

But mixing alcohol and minors is dangerous. The teenager could have another car key hidden away or get violently ill from the alcohol.

At a party in Pennsylvania, a father took away all the keys. But a fight broke out and one of the kids who was drunk was hit by a car and killed after he wandered out into the street.

The father who hosted the party was convicted under that state's social host law.

Cohasset Police Chief Brian Noonan says if parents want to allow their own child to have a drink in their own home, that's their business.

"But they cannot and should not allow other minors to illegally drink alcohol. Too many bad things can happen," he said.

Nothing is going to bring Gregory Smith back. That night four years ago the Thayer Academy graduate had his whole life ahead of him. He received a scholarship to Norwich University and planned for a military career.

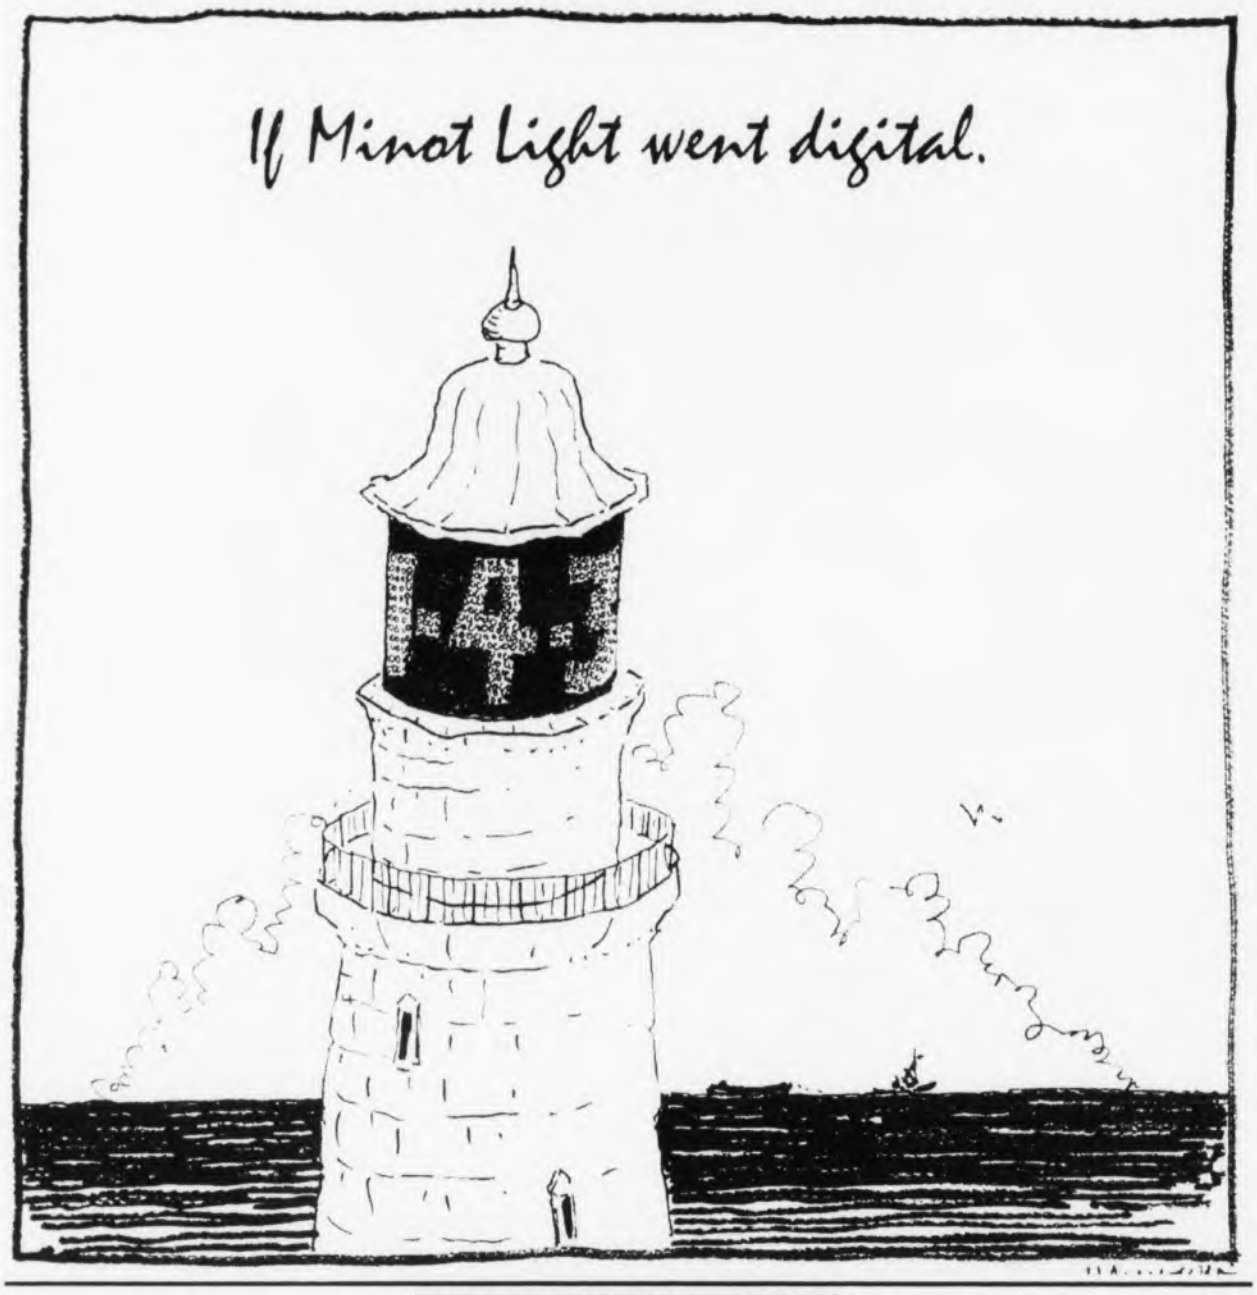
"He was going to fly jets," his father said.

While Greg Smith's death was needless — it doesn't have to be meaningless.

Let's hope the new law sends a clear message to all parents of teenagers — that allowing minors to drink is a crime — and if you do, you can be punished for it.

The new law will go a long way toward making party hosts more responsible for the behavior of their teenaged guests. However, their responsibility should be a mutual one with parents of their guests who are urged to continually instill in their children the dangers and consequences of underage drinking.

It is a responsibility we all share.



LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

A snow job

TO THE EDITOR:

When my children were small, we would walk to the center of town. A center which thrived with the Red Lion Inn, banks, a drug store, and a grocery store that delivered — if you can imagine. At the harbor end, we had Hugo's Lighthouse restaurant. These places served the people of Cohasset and the tourist, quite effectively. When their original owners had control of the businesses, service to the town folk was primary. When others ascended to ownership, smallness and service to the community became ugly epithets. When I left the Elm Street area, I lost the treasure of being able to walk to the center. The sadness stayed with me many years.

Our town has accomplished much as a unified community. We have tried to do things which benefited everyone in the town. We united behind the Art Center. We united behind the Community Center Nursery School and we united behind educating our children. However, now in the center of town and the harbor, the general thrust is to attract tourism.

I also remember when Elm Street was widened, and improved for safety reasons close to 30 years ago. Now we have the CRC (Cohasset Revitalization Corporation) a non-profit corporation, saying we really must improve the streetscapes, with flowers, road-narrowing peninsulas, canopied trees, and brick sidewalks (lest we forget the grant the CRTF tried to obtain). This all is a snow job — which will not melt with warm weather.

Dump with a view

TO THE EDITOR:

Peter Roy and Gerde Odelheide are soon to experience the truth of the adage "No good deed goes unpunished!" Their motives, methods and tastes will be impugned, and the perpetual naysayers will be in full bray..

Because of the great natural beauty of the town, we tend not to notice that much of the public space is sadly neglected, despite the efforts of the DPW within its limited budgets. We are living in a dump with nice views. We should be grateful to public-spirited citizens who propose to spruce it up, and should forgive them for being newcomers.

I don't see anything in the revitalization plans that supports the current mantra that we are heading toward cutesy Nantucket ambience with myriad craft shops replacing residences, and surely there is enough review process to roadblock any serious misdirection.

Anyway, the continual struggle by the town's nickel-nursers to emasculate the spendthrifts will slow down any constructive activity.

Let's give positive support to the revitalization concept, trusting to common sense (and review processes) to filter out crassness, commercial skewing, and excessive cutesyness. Politically incorrect colors can always be repainted, but at least the repaint will be on recent paint instead of on surfaces that have needed paint for decades.

VOTES

The following votes were unanimous and are not recorded by legislator below. Senate vote on House 4866 as amended: The bill, dubbed the Community Preservation Act, would allow some cities and towns to raise money for land conservation projects by voluntarily hiking real-estate taxes up to 3 percent. It will also levy a new $20 surcharge on transactions at the Registry of Deeds, and pool the cash - an estimated $30 million a year - to match whatever money towns decide to put into preservation programs. Senate vote 39-0.
Senate vote on House 130 as amended: The bill will deprive wanted fugitives of a slew of state benefits, including their drivers licenses, unemployment checks and welfare benefits. It would also allow police officers to search state databases for the names and addresses of people wanted in the courts. Senate vote 39-0.
Senate vote on House 4511: The bill would set aside an amount of state funds to help pay for the building of a national World War II memorial in Washington DC. Vote 37 - 0 with two not voting.
Senate vote on House 4847: The bill would establish a Child Fatality Review Team to investigate the deaths of each person under age 18. Vote 37-0 with two not voting.
The following votes are recorded below. S2082 - The bill would create a new crime of "criminal harassment." The new law would make it illegal to stalk someone or harass them by telephone. Proponents said the bill is needed to fix flaws in the state's current stalking law, which now allows someone to be convicted of stalking only if they have also threatened the safety of their victim. Opponents said it unfairly compromises freedoms of speech and movement. Vote passed house on a vote of 132-21, with five not voting.		Y

Missing names sought for vets' memorial

Below is a list of names that the Memorial Overseers Committee (with the help of Austin Ahearn) has come up with. This list is the names of those who served in the military from Aug. 14, 1945 to Dec. 31, 1946, from Cohasset. These names will be added to the war memorial at Veterans Memorial Park. At the same time the inscription at the top of the memorial will be changed to reflect the end of the Second World War to be Dec. 31, 1946. Also, there is a list of those who served from Dec. 7, 1941 to Aug. 14, 1945, who were missed when the memorial was first put up.

The committee would like to hear from anyone who might know of anyone else the committee missed. At that time these names will be added. The requirement to have a person's name on the memorial is: the person has to have lived in Cohasset at their time of going into the service.

Call the selectmen's office at 383-4105 or Austin Ahearn at 383-0529 if you know of anyone the committee may have missed.

Call the selectmen's office at 383-4105 or Austin Ahearn at 383-0529 if you know of anyone the committee may have missed.

Those who were missed who served from Dec. 7, 1941 to Aug. 14, 1945:

Vito Conte, Walter D. Ackerman, Mathew A. Brown, George H. Childs, Roger Crafts, James P. Infusino, James A. Robinson, Noel A. Ripley.

Those who served from Aug. 14, 1945, to Dec. 31, 1946:

Summer reading

The statewide summer reading program, "Open Books, Open Frontiers", is still open to school age children until Aug. 15 at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library. There is still time to bring in your reading lists and receive one of the following fabulous prizes; 3-D rainbow glasses, Frisbees or deep sea creature and rocket key chains.

A "Make Your Own Sundae" party will be held for all those who participated in the program this summer on Thursday, Aug. 17 at 1 p.m. It's never too late to join the reading fun!!

Final celebrity

Police Chief Brian Noonan is the last Cohasset celebrity storytime guest reader for the summer. Chief Noonan will make his library debut on Tuesday, Aug. 8 at 7 p.m. He will read the book, "Officer Buckle & Gloria" by Peggy Rathmann. It is a very humorous look at a police officer and his relationship with a rather active and expressive dog named Gloria. It's sure to be a crowd pleaser.

This program is free and open to all Cohasset residents. It is in conjunction with the state-wide reading program funded by the Mass. Regional Library Systems.

Internet tutoring

Individual Internet tutoring will be available on Monday and Tuesday mornings, 9 a.m. to noon beginning Aug. 7 and continuing through the month of Aug..

Two teachers — one senior volunteer and one student — will be on hand to help new Internet users.

Pre-registration is necessary. Sign-up sheets are available at the library now.

Positive feedback

TO THE EDITOR:

I am the individual who has actually performed some of the various projects Mr. Roy has undertaken in the harbor area for the town and am responsible for keeping them maintained in the future at no cost to the town, as offered by Mr. Roy. I am writing this letter in response to the disheartening criticism published in the "letters to the editor column" in the Cohasset Mariner.

Myself and the people working with me did not merely slap a coat of black and gray paint on the mentioned areas. We took great care and time to execute the duties on areas that were in dire need of attention.

The dock on Margin Street has had the same dull, faded coat of paint on it for decades. To complete this project, power washing was necessary to remove years of dirt, oil stains and mildew. Several hours of sanding was performed followed by a coat of primer and the application of a finish coat of a neutral color gray, designed to blend in with the existing colors of the area (i.e. stone walls, hotel, dock at Lawrence wharf). Several planks that were buckling were nailed down and countless nail heads were reset so as to prevent a foot or any other item from being snagged while traveling down to the floats. Handcrafted flower boxes were installed to beautify the overall look of the dock.

The Pavilion at Lawrence Wharf also received the same preparations for its painting work. Several rotten trim boards discovered while power washing were replaced. The cement columns were covered with areas of moss growth. After being cleaned, masonry block filler was applied to prevent further cracking and to seal the concrete before coating with finish paint. Large amounts of bird droppings were removed from the rafters that support the roof. Several pigeon nests were also removed. The original wire mesh installed to prevent pigeons from nesting under the pavilion had rusted where it was fastened. This caused it to pull away from the wood allowing birds to enter the eaves. To correct this, the wire mesh was re-fastened to prevent pigeons from nesting.

The benches on Lawrence Wharf were missing wood slats, as were the trash baskets. All paint on the benches was chipping and peeling. These were replaced. There existed an exposed electrical box, which protruded from the ground where young kids jump from the wall into the harbor waters. An electrician repaired this. Between the sidewalk and the grass lawn of the wharf there is a row of granite posts forming a barrier between the road and the grass lawn. Two such posts were broken so that only a five-inch stub protruded from the ground. These broken sections were dug out and replaced with new granite posts.

Two steel 50-gallon drums used as trash barrels sit next to the phone booth. These barrels were one-part sky blue with Sandy Beach Association decals on them and one part rust where all the blue paint had once been. To correct this, flaking paint was scraped off the barrels, the barrels were sanded then painted with a coat of black rust inhibitive paint as was a rusted water and electric utility pole situated at the top of the ramp utilized by local fishermen.

While it is true that the cable wire protector is yellow on the newer poles along Border Street, the one at Lawrence Wharf was weather beaten rusted piece of galvanized steel. This was wire brushed and painted. A close observer will notice that the yellow wire covers are a newer product made of plastic. These were not painted. As it turns out, the gray painted guide wire protector is more visible now than it was in it's past condition.

Guardrail all along Border Street received a new coat of white paint. The rusted orange and brown steel bars that support these wooden guardrails were scraped down, wire brushed and then treated with a new coat of white paint. The approximately 150 feet of chain link barbed wire fence along the boat yard at Border Street received attention by way of an application of white colored metal formulated paint.

Another project undertaken was the addition of two new benches of identical style to accommodate the one sole bench (which was also repaired and painted) located at the seawall in front of Memorial Park. This was intended to accommodate more than just two people to sit and enjoy the view of the harbor.

During the time spent working on these various projects, I had the opportunity to engage in conversations with many of the townspeople walking around the harbor area and while I will admit that an occasional person passed by and grumbled his or her displeasure, there was an overwhelming majority of people who felt that the improvements looked great and only heightened the beauty of the area. One individual remarked that Lawrence Wharf was a Town landmark of historical nature and that the paint job would attract more people to visit that area.

While I can understand the editors at the Mariner feeling compelled to publish the opinions of the townspeople on events, in this case criticism, I can not excuse them for not doing what most other newspaper editorials regard as protocol, that is to publish the opinions of both sides of an issue. This would not have been difficult to do considering that many of the staff live right here in Cohasset. A person would only have to walk down to the harbor and ask someone to offer their opinion. I believe that if this was done, much of the positive feedback that I've heard could have been shared with the Mariner. Unless of course, positive feedback was not a desired input.

Minority control

TO THE EDITOR

I, like most pro-train people just hate to see our town take all "our" rights away with these silly town meetings. I have written letters to every other paper in the area, asking the towns of Hingham, Cohasset and Scituate for an open ballet and a binding vote on the train. It's time we stop the minority control of our towns and go back to the American way.

Don't transform it

TO THE EDITOR:

The reason most people come to Cohasset is because they like it the way it is. Now they come and change it as soon as possible.

Why not leave it and add to it, not transform it, such as financing the new library or an all-year swimming pool or a skating rink? That would please everyone.

Support appreciated

TO THE EDITOR:

The Cohasset Benefit Committee would like to gratefully acknowledge the generous contributions of the following local businesses to the Eleventh Annual Children's Hospital Tennis Tournament: The Good Sport, Hunneman Coldwell Banker, Stop and Shop, Maggie's Corner, Shaw's, Cohasset House of Pizza, Papa Gino's, The Red Lion Inn, Atlantica, Emily Malone Catering, Dunkin' Donuts, The Village Butcher and Deli, JJ's, French Memories, Atlantic Bagel, Curtis Liquors, Bernard's, Cohasset Tennis and Squash Club, and Kinnealey Meats.

We realize that these businesses are asked to donate to many different causes throughout the year, and are so appreciative of their support for this charity event.

As well, the following neighbors offered their tennis courts for use in the tournament: Mr. and Mrs. Peter Roy, Mr. and Mrs. David Keefe, Mr. and Mrs. Peter Goedecke, Mrs. John Roy, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Higgins, Mr. and Mrs. Guy Rebuffe, Mrs. and Mrs. Joel carpenter, Ms. Esther Williams, Mr. Richard Chute, Mr. and Mrs. Michael Hurled, Mrs. Fran Wakeman, Dr. and Mrs. Shapur Naimi, Mr. and Mrs. Gary Vanderweil, Mr. Chum Steele, Ms. Debbie Thaxter, Mr. and Mrs. Bruce Herzfelder, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Walsh, Mrs. and Mrs. John McBride.

The tournament depends on their hospitality, and we are indebted to them for their continued generosity.

A heart-felt thank you to all mentioned here, and to the many other friends who helped behind the scenes. Any further donations of the benefit of Children's Hospital can be sent to 18 Bancroft Way.

Hollywood charm

The Cohasset Mariner townonline bulletin board received the following response to the proposed Cohasset revitalization project:

Please leave our town alone. Do not change Elm St at all. Haven't we done enough to our streets lately? Just try to drive through or within the town. Leave well enough alone. We have many more pressing projects that the town people need to be implementing, such as providing low-income housing, providing a new Senior Center etc. We need to worry about people's needs first, not the beautification of an area that already has New England charm enough to bring Hollywood to our town in the past.

Second fiddle

A lot of ink was spilled last week reporting breathlessly that George Double-U had chosen — the envelope, please! — Dick Cheney to be his running mate for vice president in the fall election and what it means to the Republican ticket.

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

Next week, a lot of valuable air time that could better be devoted to a Shannon Tweed movie will be used up when Algore announces his pick for second place on the Democratic slate and the pundits tell us what the choice means for the future of Western civilization.

Then whoever wins the presidency will devote at least part of his time to devising something not too difficult nor too important for the vice president to do when he is not off in Air Force II attending the funeral of the leader of a Third World country with three or more oil wells.

As far as I can see, the only roles that are authorized by the Constitution for the vice president are to preside over the Senate — trying not to nod off over the gavel — and to check the President's pulse every now and then in case the Second Lady has to redecorate the White House.

The only roles that are authorized by the Constitution for the vice president are to preside over the Senate — trying not to nod off over the gavel — and to check the President's pulse every now and then in case the Second Lady has to redecorate the White House.

"This isn't worth a pitcher of warm spit," said John Nance Garner, the vice president under FDR when he learned that it would still cost him a nickel to ride the subway.

Actually, I am told, old Cactus Jack didn't really say precisely those words, but used a more colorful scatological phrase that had to be cleaned up before his press secretary could pass it on to the family newspapers of the day.

Even our own John Adams, the Braintree lawyer who became the first vice president, found out early in the game that not even a Founding Father could escape the ennui that went with the No. 2 spot in the administration of George Washington.

"My country has in its wisdom contrived for me the most insignificant office that ever the invention of man contrived or his imagination conceived," he said upon learning that Abigail would still have to do family laundry.

Vice President John C. Calhoun found boredom in the office, too, and resigned to run for the Senate where the action was.

At least one vice president, Richard Johnson, who served under Martin Van Buren, was said to have spent his entire vice presidency (1837-1841) serving beer and sour mash at his public house in Kentucky, occasionally checking obits in the Washington press to see if his services were needed. They weren't.

Johnson, an independent cuss who married under common law a slave woman and raised their kids as if they were white, was so widely disliked that the Democrats refused to renominate him or pick anyone else for vice president in 1840. Luckily, the Whigs won, or we might have had to struggle without a vice president.

That's what they thought of the office in those days.

And that's why the story is told of the woman who had two sons. One ran away to sea. The other stayed home and became vice president. Neither was ever heard from again.

Anti-handgun group hosts first meeting

A group of local women who attended the Million Mom March in Washington, D.C., want the momentum to continue. That was just the beginning, according to local organizers, who hosted a forum on gun control July 20 in Cohasset.

Several residents attended the event, along with guest speaker John Rosenthal from Stop Handgun Violence and Mary McDonald, sister of author Patrick McDonald, who, in his book, "All Souls," chronicled their family's torment when a younger brother accidentally murdered his friend. Ted LeClair, Democratic candidate for the state senate, spoke to the gathering along with Cohasset Police Det. Rick Grassie and state representative candidates Garrett Bradley, Michael Holden and Walter Murray.

"There are more regulations on the manufacturing of toy guns than real guns," Rosenthal told the gathering. For those in Cohasset who may have been thinking, "not in Cohasset," they were surprised to learn there are 200 gun licenses in Cohasset and there have been several gun dealerships located in the area. Det. Grassie also explained that the number of guns is not limited when a license is issued to an individual.

LeClair said that if only one thing emerged from the inaugural meeting, it was the need for parents to ask more questions. "It's fine for parents to know that when their child is visiting a friend, their parents will be home. But we need to go further with our questions. We need to know if there's a gun in the friend's home, and if so, whether that gun is stored in a secure place, that it is not loaded and that there is a lock on the gun. The goal is not to get rid of legally-owned handguns, but to stop the violence from occurring," he said.

"I came to this meeting because I wanted to support what you were doing. I came home really energized to become more involved," Cohasset resident Kathy Ofsthun said after the meeting.

The Cohasset group will host a second event in September to generate increased awareness and resources to influence the upcoming elections as they relate to anti-handgun legislation.

Annual GOP cookout

GOP Chairman Janet Fogarty of Cohasset announced that the annual Cohasset cookout will be held Sunday, Aug. 27, from 4:30 to 7 p.m. at the seaside estate of Ted and Julie Guild.

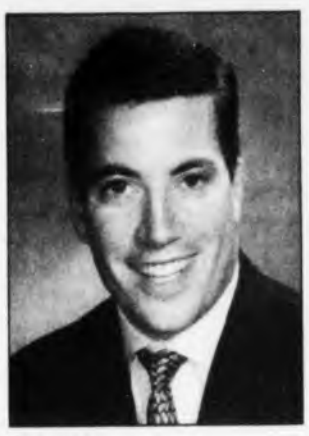
All South Shore residents from Norfolk, Plymouth, Barnstable and Bristol counties will be invited to attend to hear GOP leader Francis Marini (R-Hanson) discuss the report from Beacon Hill.

Another highlight will be a tribute to Molly Kochkeppel, who recently announced she was retiring from the Patriot Ledger after several decades of service. She will be honored for assisting a myriad of good causes through her reporting.

Open to the public reservations are required and may be made by calling Janet Fogarty (383-3036), Polly Logan (383-0031), Julie Guild (383-6443) or Edythe Ford (383-1648).

Air traffic causes noise on campaign trail

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM



Mike Holden

Garrett Bradley

Mary Anne McKenna

Walter Murray

As summer sets in for its final stretch, local residents continue to take advantage of the warm, if not wet, weather while it lasts. Family dinners are moved to backyard picnic benches. Evening reading time is spent on the porch swing, and windows are left open in an attempt to capture the cool ocean breezes.

But according to three of the four candidates in the area's state representative race, these tranquil Rockwell-esque moments are becoming ruined by the thunderous rumble of multi-ton aircraft beginning their descent into Boston's Logan Airport.

"There's been a dramatic increase in air traffic over Hingham, Hull and Cohasset," said Democratic candidate Mike Holden, a Hingham resident. "It has been much more noticeable over the last year."

"It appears that the jet noise over these neighborhoods has increased exponentially in recent months, to the point where families are routinely awakened in the middle of the night from noise vibrations," said Mary Anne McKenna, the race's lone Republican candidate, and also of Hingham.

"I feel the issue is not only existing jet noise, but what the proposed new runway would do to the area," added Hingham's Garrett Bradley, the other Democratic challenger. "At one point in the village in Hull, I couldn't hear myself speak."

Hull, Cohasset and Hingham sit right underneath the flight pattern for planes landing at Logan's south to north runway. From Hull Village, to Crowe's Point in Hingham, and along Atlantic Avenue in Cohasset, planes fly overhead on an average of every 45-60 seconds. And with plans to create a new runway at the airport, planes flying over the South Shore coast could more than triple.

But one candidate says the jet noise is not as bad as people make it out to be.

Unenrolled candidate Walter Murray lives in Hull Village and is able to say air traffic isn't just "an abstract," but something he has to experience daily.

And according to Murray, though he can look right up and see the planes overhead, the noise "is not that bothersome," especially when compared to what exists in South Boston and Winthrop, locations even more affected by air traffic at Logan Airport.

"It isn't as significant issue as some make it out to be," he said basing his response not only from his personal experience, but also that of his neighbors.

Murray's view is in stark contrast to Holden's views. "If you talk to folks in the northern sections of towns, you won't have to travel far to find scores of people who have had sleep disturbances and are upset with the number of overhead flights," said Holden.

While he was chairman of the Hingham Board of Selectmen, Holden was partly responsible for the creation of the Jet Noise Task Force, that has representatives from the three towns, analyzing and discussing the air-traffic problem. Holden said one of the reasons he should awarded the seat on Beacon Hill is that he has already shown leadership on the issue. "I've been directly involved...I've responded," said Holden who commissioned the initial airport expansion impact study, which led to the creation of the task force. "It wasn't a knee-jerk reaction. We had someone study the issue, and compile information, and then take that information and see what can be discerned from that."

His conclusion, based on his experience with issue, is increased air traffic demands could be dispensed with through "regionalization," as a way to avoid shifting the burden onto one particular town or area.

"If you take advantage of existing airports where your distributing the burden, as opposed to dramatically increasing the burden in small areas, there is a less dramatic impact on any one area," he said. "The burden is shared, as are the benefits."

Bradley said in order for Boston to maintain its status as a world-class city, another significant airport is needed in the region. "Cities like New York, Chicago all have double airports," he pointed out.

Bradley named Springfield and Worcester as possible locations for a second airport, citing the cities' difficulty in shaking off their decades-old depression. "The airport would provide a significant impact [to those areas]," he said. Bradley wondered why Logan Airport would even consider another runway, and more traffic, when passengers already have a tough time getting to the airport. He suggested rerouting all commercial flights to Worcester as a way of relieving the back log of commercial and passenger planes waiting for clearance to land in Boston. "The general consensus is why [expand Logan] when you can't get there already."

McKenna echoed Bradley's and Holden's call for better use of the area's regional airports, including T. F. Green Airport in Providence, "before conceding to a new runway."

Bradley also cited T. F. Green's rise in popularity as indicative of the congestion problem in Boston. T.F. Green recently underwent an extensive renovation and has become a popular alternative for passenger service. "I think the expansion of Providence is a primary example of what people will do to avoid using Logan," he said.

McKenna also said she supported attempts to force flight paths further out over the Atlantic Ocean as a way to "minimize threats to our environment and quality of life."

But Murray said the refusal to allow Logan expansion, though good for the area, would be bad for the state as a whole. "Leadership is about what is good for the district and the state," he said. "The state is losing business to Manchester [New Hampshire] and Rhode Island." He said Providence is attempting to tie in its Amtrak train line with the airport with a multi-million dollar hotel/entertainment complex. "That's not good...They're already attracting a lot of Massachusetts residents."

Murray said Cohasset, Hingham, and particularly Hull could use Logan expansion as a way to increase the town's state aid. According to Murray, who said he talked to a Boston city councilor, Massport has a "wonderful noise abatement program." With the three towns recently debating overrides because of budget constraints, Murray said it would be possible for the towns to add to their revenue streams.

He was also quick to characterize his opponent's views as a "knee-jerk reaction" the result of fear of "voter backlash."

"It's politics as usual," said Murray. "If anyone registers a complaint about a proposal, they are automatically against it...That's the lack of true leadership."

Mike Holden and Garrett Bradley will be squaring off on Sept. 19 in the state primary. The winner will then face Republican Mary Anne McKenna and unenrolled candidate Walter Murray in the Nov. 7 general election. The winner will replace Mary Jeanette Murray, R-Cohasset, who is retiring after 26 years representing the Third Plymouth District.

Candidates ponder: There ought to be a law

By Jeanne M. Rideout
JRIDEOUT@CNC.COM

With the November election bringing with it the winds of change, what are some of the laws the three contenders in the Plymouth-Norfolk District Senate race think ought to be on the books?

Incumbent state Senator Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, and challengers Ted LeClair, D-Marshfield, and James Cantwell, D-Weymouth, share their crusades and their pet legislative peeves as well.

Senator Hedlund thinks there ought to be a law against legislators filing frivolous laws.

"There were 16,000 bills filed last year, and 10,000 were frivolous. Politicians think they need to be all things to all people," Hedlund said.

Many of these frivolous bills are filed with no hope by the filer the bill will pass.

And, if Beacon Hill arteries are clogged with legislative fat, this makes it harder for a lean and meaningful bill to become law.

Hedlund thinks bills he has filed on honoring veterans on Memorial Day and on penalizing persons who provide unlicensed handguns to minors ought to be law.

"It kills me to think that the sacrifices veterans have made, especially the sacrifices of families of deceased veterans and veterans who gave their lives in combat, are not memorialized properly on Memorial Day. The Blue Laws have been repealed and as a result retail stores are open on Memorial Day. Stores should shut down at least until noon out of respect. I file the bill every year, but it never makes it out of conference committee. A lot of smaller stores would like to close, but feel they must stay open to compete with the chains," Hedlund said.

Hedlund believes there ought to be a law that existing laws are enforced, especially in the realm of gun control.

"We need to enforce the laws we already have. We have endless laws being proposed on gun control, and we aren't enforcing the laws on the books already," Hedlund said.

Hedlund singled out the Bartley/Fox law meting out punishment for the illegal possession of firearms, saying the law is routinely passed over by judges and not enforced.

"Here we are always talking about new gun control laws, and we aren't enforcing the ones we have already," Hedlund said.

Hedlund has filed a bill, S.151, that would penalize providing unlicensed firearms to minors. The bill is currently in the Public Safety Committee.

Hedlund thinks S.151 ought to be a law and ought to be enforced.

State Senate candidate Ted LeClair thinks there ought to be a law extending education reform funding, now that the program is in its seventh and final year. In Fiscal Year 2000, the 1993 Education Reform Act mandating education funding at pre-formulated funding levels will cease to exist as a law.

"Through this law over the last seven years we as a citizenry have made a concerted financial commitment to improving our schools and to improving the education of our children. That must not stop," LeClair said.

LeClair said that at least three-quarters of the people he has talked with believe the passage of a tax rollback will doom funding for education.

"People want the next state Senator to make it his number one priority to extend education reform into the future and ensure that the funding is available to continue these important reforms. They know with a tax rollback that is not possible," LeClair said.

LeClair agrees with Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan, who said public schools should not bear the brunt of politically motivated tax cuts.

"Most would agree on this point, and most importantly those I meet at the doors and in neighborhoods do," LeClair said. "We are correct to demand that our public schools be staffed by an elite teaching corps, people who by their inspiration and intelligence will lead our children into a new century of educational exploration. In my campaign for the state Senate, I have pledged to talk one-on-one with as many constituents as possible. I am making good on that promise as I walk the neighborhoods of this district and meet with people who tell me the education of their children is a priority without parallel."

That is why LeClair thinks the Legislature's number one priority in January should be to pass a law continuing the commitment to schools, teachers and students.

"We need to make good on the promise that every person in this country deserves a top-notch education. Nothing is more important to the parents and grandparents, the neighbors and friends of our public school students, than to endow our children with the best education we can offer. This is an issue without borders and without compromise. In every community and in every neighborhood, we must demand that our children receive the highest quality education," LeClair said.

State Senate candidate James Cantwell thinks there ought to be more laws insuring quality of life.

"I believe the role of a state Senator is to understand the everyday needs of our families and neighbors and, if elected, I will work hard to improve our collective quality of life," Cantwell said.

Cantwell would like to see improved parental leave opportunities.

"In Europe, new mothers can stay home with their infants for up to 83 weeks of paid parental leave. Here in the United States, workers are guaranteed leave for up to 12 weeks, but only if they take the time unpaid, and only if they work for a company with 50 or more employees. We live in changing economic and financial times often requiring both parents to work to make ends meet. Providing paid parental leave is essential to meet the changing needs of Massachusetts families, strengthen the bonds of young families and provide a family-friendly working atmosphere," Cantwell said.

Cantwell, an environmental attorney, believes there should also be a law reforming the site assignment process for solid waste facilities such as the Abington Trash Transfer Station proposed to be constructed near the South Weymouth line. The Abington Board of Health voted last week to reopen the public hearing on the fate of the trash transfer station.

"Having testified in Abington recenlty on the need for hearings to overturn the site assignment permit for the Abington trash transfer facility, I believe another quality of life issue which must be addressed with new legislation is the need to reform an industry-driven site assignment process for solid waste facilities. Trash facilities of a reasonable scope need to be created in appropriate locations, but not the proposed facility with the proposed scope in Abington," Cantwell said.

Cantwell said there ought to be a law reforming the "flawed" site assignment process that permitted the proposed 1,800-ton-per-day trash facility to receive earlier support from the former Abington Board of Health.

Reforms Cantwell suggests are: improving notice to abutting residents and towns so citizens can impact the proposals before they are voted; changing the burden of proof required for site assignment permits to allow communities greater influence over the location and scope of trash facilities; and a mandate that a comprehensive study be completed by the host community to both protect the health, safety and environmental concerns of area residents.

Stars of the Week

Robby McCunney and Brendan Doonan have lead the way both offensively and on the mound for the Cohasset 8-year old All-Star team that swept through their competition in the Braintree Friendship League over the last few weeks. The two combined to pitch a no-hitter in a 9-0 win last week over the host Braintree American team.

New soccer coach looks to kick up enthusiasm level

Nigro takes over as boys soccer coach

By Joe Reardon
CORRESPONDENT

If Dave Nigro's upbeat attitude and competitive nature is at all contagious and filters throughout his Skipper squad, the Cohasset High varsity soccer team's South Shore League opponents will be in for anything but an easy time this fall.

The Aug. 28 date when players can officially begin working out for the fall season can't come quick enough for the Hull resident, former semi-pro player, Nigro is already counting down the days to when he can conduct his first practice as the Cohasset High varsity soccer coach.

It should be a good challenge," said Nigro. "I'm looking forward to it."

Nigro is taking over the head coaching duties from former coach Juan Ramon, who accepted the position as head coach at Milton Academy. Under Ramon, the Skippers enjoyed a successful season in 1999, culminating with victories in the Division 3 South Sectional tournament.

Nigro would like to see that streak continue and plans to instill in his players the importance of hard play when Cohasset threatens on offense and has to tighten the defensive reins when opponents push the advantage into the Skippers' end. Nigro brings a well-rounded approach to the game, emphasizing aggressiveness on both offense and defense. Building and sustaining momentum plays a big role in Nigro's coaching technique.

"I work on good ball possession, building defense and moving forward," he said.

"I'm really impressed by (Nigro's) enthusiasm, knowledge and professionalism," said acting athletic director Ron Ford. "I think the style of play he likes to have the teams play and the way he teaches it will really help our boys flourish."

Although the Cohasset job represents Nigro's first as head coach of a high school program, he hardly lacks experience and knowledge of the game. His resume is extensive and impressive.

"I'll play anybody, anytime. You're not going to play better without that quality competition."
Dave Nigro

Nigro got his first taste of coaching in the Hull Youth League and went on to coach the Mass Bay Breakers and South Shore United Blazers Under-15 team for seven years in the Massachusetts Premier League. He was also on the sidelines as coach of the Under-15 and Under-14 teams in the Olympic Developmental Program. The teams included some of the best soccer talent on the South Shore, from Hingham to Plymouth.

On the field, Nigro played four seasons in the Laza League, which featured mainly Portuguese players in the Taunton area. Nigro saw firsthand just how much effort they put into their game and how highly regarded soccer is as a sport among the foreign players.

"It was mostly an ethnic flavor," said Nigro, one of just three English-speaking players in the league.

As for playing in the always-tough South Shore League and facing perennial-tourney squads such as Hanover, Norwell and Norton, Nigro believes meeting the iron of the league on the field will only help the Skippers' improve their own game. Tough competition during the season also proves invaluable come tourney time.

Intimidation, Nigro said, will not be a factor.

"I'll play anybody, anytime," he said. "You're not going to play better without that quality competition."

Nigro intends to work closely with the town's youth program and Cohasset's JV team to develop players for the future. Like most towns in the South Shore, lacrosse has become hugely popular among kids and the sport has stripped some of the better athletes from soccer programs. Nigro, though, believes soccer's popularity is still very much alive. He is looking forward to reinforcing the program in Cohasset and make a lasting contribution for the coming years.

You can't ask much more from a coach than what Nigro is more than willing to offer Cohasset High.

Cohasset tennis legend still going strong

Chum Steele wins 16th National Tennis Title

By Terry Kahn
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Cohasset's Chum Steele, inducted into the New England Tennis Hall of Fame two years ago, made it clear that he wasn't ready to retire by partnering with Charles Hoeveler to win the Men's Doubles 55 years-and-older national championship in Newport Beach, California.

Steele and Hoeveler, seeded second in the tournament, rallied from a second set loss in the finals to capture the crown 6-2, 4-6, 6-3 over Californians Dennis Trout and Ahmed Dauob.

"We played well," said Steele, "but some of our opponents still thought I had a great backhand return of service, which I don't. So they actually played into our strength, which was Charlie's court coverage."

The title was Steele's 16th national championship, and solidified his reputation as one of the greatest doubles competitors in the region's history. A player on the world circuit in the late 60's and early 70's, Steele made the main singles draw at Wimbledon five times, and the United States championship draw 10 times.

His titles include four national mixed doubles indoor championships, seven national father-and-son doubles championships with his father, Chauncey Steele, and five senior men's doubles crowns. He had last won a national event 15 years ago, taking both the 40 years-and-older grasscourt and hardcourt titles with Hoeveler as his partner.

Steele also competed last week in the National Father-and-Son grasscourt championships at the Longwood Cricket Club, teaming with his son Daniel, a former Cohasset High standout who now attends Rollins College in Orlando, Florida. They won four matches— two in the championship round and two in the consolations — including an upset over former United States Davis Cup player Fred McNair and his son.

"I coached the Skippers for two years," recalled Steele, "and Dan was our number-two player as a ninth grader." When the younger Steele transferred to a Florida tennis academy, Chum concluded his coaching career.

Steele's playing career seems back on track, however. In August, Steele will join a United States squad competing for the international Columbus Trophy in Johannesburg, South Africa. And in September, he'll continue his partnership with California's Hoeveler at the National Grasscourts Doubles event in Philadelphia.

"Chum's playing better than he has in years," said wife Deborah Thaxter, herself a former junior tennis champion who's teamed with her husband in several New England senior mixed doubles events. "Although he'll never admit it."

Little Leaguers dominate in All-Star play

The Cohasset eight-year-old travel baseball team went undefeated in the Braintree Friendship League, clinching the first ever division title for an 8-year-old Cohasset team in the annual summer baseball league.

The team won seven consecutive games behind a well balanced pitching and hitting attack. Cohasset defeated teams from much larger towns, including Quincy, Braintree, Walpole, Sharon, Weymouth and Duxbury.

The league consisted of 14 teams in the South Shore area.

Highlights of the season included a combined no-hitter pitched by Robby McCunney and Brendan Doonan in a 9-0 win against Braintree American East. This impressive effort followed the two hit shut-out they pitched against Quincy in their opening game. In 16 innings, McCunney allowed only one hit, one run (unearned), and had 41 strike-outs.

Hitting was also outstanding. Home runs were hit by Jordan Berry, Dean Driscoll, Eamon Davis and Robby McCunney. John Kearney, Brendan Doonan and Chris Brown also came up big at the plate. The 13 talented eight-year olds who made up this team were selected from a group of 36 who tried out.

"It's been a pleasure seeing the kids develop so well," said coach Mike Kearney. "They have gone beyond my expectations."

The team was managed by Bob McCunney and coaches Peter Buckley and Kearney. These three emphasized fundamentals in batting, base running and fielding in their twice weekly practices. To promote familiarity and expertise with various positions, the coaches allow the players to try different positions in practice, enabling them to get a taste for pitching, the infield and outfield. Naturally, good sportsmanship was another principle espoused by the coaches.

"Although made up of individuals, baseball is the classic team sport," assessed manager McCunney. "On the other hand, it's important for kids at this age to try different positions, especially in practice."

McCunney wanted to emphasize that the team's success could not have been achieved without the contributions of all the players.

First baseman Chris Rose is poised for action in last week's big matchup between the Cohasset and Scituate 10-year old All-Stars. Cohasset won the game 2-1, with Rose laying down a perfect sacrifice bunt in the first inning to set up the game's first run.

"We've had excellent play and base running by Jodi Rosano, Eamon Davis and Ian Quinlan," he noted, "and outstanding fielding by Tommy Buckley, Andy McKenna, Jon Guiggio and Derek Youngman."

Often unstated in youth sports is the important role parents play by making sure the kids come to practice and by watching the kids play their games.

With much early success, it's likely we'll hear more about these talented baseball players in the years to come.

"I'm amazed at how well the kids listen and respond," noted coach Peter Buckley. "When they're on the practice field or in a game, we have their undivided attention."

Other Little League News

Cohasset currently has six other little league teams involved in District 8 All-Star play: two each of 11 and 10 year olds, along with both a 12 and nine-year old squad.

All of them wrap up play this week, and then move onto the playoffs over the weekend. All teams qualify for the post-season.

Despite a 1-7 record, 10 B coach David Muir feels his team might surprise a few teams once the playoffs get underway.

"The team has shown steady progress, and we've been in just about every game," offered Muir. "We have a well balanced team."

Muir has been moving his players around quite a bit in these early games, letting the kids have some fun while also trying to determine his best lineup.

"The next few games we're going to be putting players in the positions they're best suited to and trying to tighten things up for the playoffs," said Muir.

Stuart Hebb is a soft-spoken man with a cutthroat hobby.

Hebb is a dead-serious sailor who races at a highly competitive level every chance he gets. In July, he finished fifth in the Etchells North American Championships held in Halifax, Nova Scotia July 14-16.

The field was deeper than the number of boats might indicate, drawing entrants from as far afield as Australia, New Zealand, England, Canada and the US. The Etchells circuit, Hebb says, is the place where competitive sailors who aren't bankrolled by billionaires or a personal fortune compete.

"This is where everyone ends up. It's the best measuring stick for serious sailors," he says, adding, "It's the right price range to draw serious racers who are good. It's about the most competitive short of the Olympics."

How competitive? The winner of the championship was Russell Coutts, the skipper for Team New Zealand, the defending champions who won the America's Cup in March. Coutts has been offered $5 million to sail for a Swiss billionaire in the next America's Cup.

"He's considered the best," Hebb said.

Hebb not only finished fifth overall, he also bested Coutts in one of the races. He takes great pleasure in that fact.

"Everyone who beat me was a professional sailor, but one," he says. "Bill Lynn is the only other amateur."

The Etchells regatta consists of six races. The competitors take their best five and that is their score.

Hebb is not a newcomer to the racing scene. He started sailing when he was seven.

"I grew up in Nova Scotia," he says. "Sailing and ice hockey is pretty much it up there. I played ice hockey, but sailing was definitely my sport."

By 13, Hebb was part of the youth racing circuit and the Canadian government was picking the tab.

"You got to get around the world quite a bit," Hebb says.

Another advantage — or so he thought at the time — was that it was time away from school. Not that he thinks it made much of a difference.

"I wasn't paying much attention when I was there," he says.

On the other hand, something must have sunk in. Hebb holds a college degree and runs a successful fund in Hingham. But all that came later.

Stuart Hebb and his two man crew aboard his racing boat, the "Thin Ice".

In 1982, Hebb crewed on the winning boat in Lightning class at Youth World Championships in Italy.

"That was sort of the peak experience," he says.

Well, perhaps we need to talk about twin peaks. The second came five years later.

"I sailed for Canada in the 1987 America's Cup," Hebb says. He was a member of the crew for that race.

The part that wasn't so much fun was the finish, when the Canadians came in eighth out of 14 entrants.

Hebb began sailing professionally when he got out of college. He's sailed 'em all — single-handed, three-man keel boats and the big, pricey boats owned by incredibly wealthy people.

"I hated that," he says. "There were all these politics on board."

He explains that to really compete in a race, the skipper must have full control of every aspect. When you skipper on someone else's boat you cede some of that control to the owner.

"It was very frustrating," Hebb says. "The only way you get control is by owning the boat."

A good boat doesn't come cheap. Hebb just sunk $42,000 in a new boat for the Etchells race. It's nowhere near what some professional sailors spend to buy and maintain their boats.

"Relatively speaking, that's quite cheap," he adds.

Hebb prefers the three-man keel boats. He's sailed solo, but found the physical demands outweighed the thrills.

> "It's two-and-a-half hours of decision-making. One little mistake and ten boats can pass you at this level."
> Stuart Hebb

"You have to be in really good shape," Hebb says.

His favorite races are the single design races, like the Etchells. In the Etchells, ever boat out there is identical in design. That levels the field and lets the competence of captain and crew dominate.

"The one design fleet racing captures the essence of racing," he says.

Racing can be as stressful as it is thrilling, he says.

"It's two-and-a-half hours of decision-making," Hebb explains. "One little mistake and ten boats can pass you at this level."

Hebb loves the excitement of having to make split second decisions, trying to anticipate every situation and response before it happens. It also is an intense sport with boats jockeying for position.

"It's a knife-fight all the way out there," he says. "Sometimes there are collisions."

Hebb knows about collisions. Someone rammed into his brand new boat and put a hole in it during the Etchells race he just competed in. Even so, Hebb describes racing sailboats as "a gentlemen's sport."

The camaraderie of the sailing set is a definite plus. Wherever you go to race, he says, you immediately become part of a community.

Hebb isn't racing full-time, but it is still time-consuming. His "race season" begins in Miami in March and then he works his way up the coast. His next will come in the fall in New York. Then he'll take the boat back down to Miami for the winter circuit.

"I probably spend 20 days per year racing," he says. "That's all the time I have for it."

The biggest thing on his agenda is qualifying for Etchells World Championships to be held in England in 2001. This is the really big race for serious racers.

While most races are open, the Etchells World Championships set a limit on the number of boats that can participate. They tried 120 when the race was held in Marblehead, but that proved to be too many. The 2001 Worlds Championship will be limited to the top 85.

"It's just like the Boston Marathon," he explains. He is determined to be one of those 85.

Hebb will be choosy about which races he uses to qualify.

"When I do a race, I want to go some place where there's a good probability of wind," he says. "Usually where the weather sucks, you have good wind."

Nova Scotia is an obvious place. Ditto England. The bad news is most of the eastern seaboard is a dud in the summertime. There are, exceptions, he hastens to add. Buzzard's Bay has great wind.

So far Hebb is the only sailor in the family. His wife, Liz, isn't interested in the racing world. His children, Laura, 5, and Claire, 3, find the whole thing a giant snooze.

"I take them out, but they just get bored with the whole thing and fall asleep," he says.

Swim team goes down for first time

By Eileen McBride
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

The Cohasset swim team's winning streak finally ended on Friday when Scituate's Knight's of Columbus beat the home team by just 9 points. In a fiercely fought competition, both teams put in valiant performances right to the final lap, ending the most exciting competition of the season with a 316 to 307 point victory for Scituate.

The meet started well for Cohasset with a win for the home team in all the 100 yard medley relays (boys, 8 and under boys: 1st: Doonan, Porter, Stevenson, Carrier; 3rd: Yeager, Wise, Poh, Durkin, T.; 4th: Lynner, Campbell, Ofsthun, Shipp; girls, 8 and under: 1st: Fontaine, Teague, Musto, Libby; 3rd: Mahoney, Kelly, Jennings, Zappolo; 4th: Karski, Donohue, McBride, Dickinson; boys, 10 and under: 1st: Hunt, Musto, Cunningham, Doonan; 4th: Poh, Porter, Shipp, Drybanski; 5th: Bell, Kelly, Yeager, Wheelwright; girls, 10 and under: 1st: Fortin, Hernan, Meehan, Mahoney; 2nd: Sacks, Meikleham, Campbell, Regan; 4th: Costa, Dunn, Anderson, Hunt; boys, 12 and under: 1st: Hernan, Conway, Dickinson, Zappolo; 4th: Hospod, Roach, Faber, Gammon; girls, 12 and under: 1st: Musto, Durkin, L., Garber, Daley; 3rd: Plante, Shea, James, Englander; 5th: Wheelwright, Coggins, Whoriskey, Crowley-Buck).

In the 200-yard medley relays the seventeen and under boys added to the wins with a first and fourth place finish. The girls just missed the win but took second and third places to bring Cohasset's score to 60, against Scituate's 36 (1st: Langham, Ingber, McCarthy, Faber; 4th: Regan, Etkind, Flynn, Simms; girls, 17 and under, 200 yards medley relay: 2nd: Larson, Anderson, Garber, Carter; 3rd: Bugley, Faber, Orsini, Regan; 5th: Marr, Grimm, Kondrat, Foley, T.).

In the first of the individual events, the 10 and under boys took off with a win in the 50-yard freestyle, and the girls followed suit finishing first, second and third (boys: 1st: Cunningham, C.; 2nd: Doonan, P.; 4th: Poh, R.; girls: 1st: Meehan, S.; 2nd: Mahoney, C.; 4th: Campbell, A.).

The 100 yard individual medleys produced four further wins, from the 12 and under boys and girls, the 12 and under boys, and the 14 and under boys. The 12 and under girls finished second, fourth and fifth, and the 14 and under girls took third and fourth (boys, 10 and under: 1st: Dickinson, R; 3rd: Conway, C.; 4th: Faber, C.; girls, 12 and under: 2nd: Durkin, L.; 4th: Garber, C.; 5th: James, K.; boys, 14 and under: 1st: McCarthy, W.; 3rd: Flynn, C.; girls, 14 and under: 3rd: Orsini, M.; 4th: Faber, A.; 5th: Afshar, Y.) The individual medleys ended with the seventeen and under boys and girls finishing in third, fourth and fifth positions, bringing Cohasset's score to 98, against Scituate's 74 (boys, 17 and under: 3rd: Faber, S.; 4th: Langham, J.; 5th: Regan, C; girls, 17 and under: 3rd: Marr, M.; 4th: Foley, C.; 5th: Bugley, A.).

The 25-yard freestyle began with second, third and fourth position finishes for the 8 and under boys and girls (boys: 2nd: Porter, I.; 3rd: Carrier, J.; 4th: Durkin, T.; girls: 2nd: Zappolo, C.; 3rd: Mahoney, M.; 4th: Jennings, M.). The 10 and under boys and girls secured wins in both their races (boys: 1st: Hunt, A.; 3rd: Shipp, A.; 4th: Drybanski, J.; girls: 1st: Sacks, M.; 2nd: Mahoney, C.; 3rd: Regan, M.).

In the 50-yard freestyle, Cohasset started with a win in both 12 and under races (boys: 1st: Hernan, A.; 2nd: Zappolo, N.; 6th: Hospod, T.; girls: 1st: Daley, M.; 2nd: Englander, E.; 3rd: Musto, L.). Performances in the remaining 50-yard races brought less success, but were enough to maintain a 32-point lead for Cohasset (boys, 14 and under: 2nd: Previte, J.; 3rd: Simms, C.; girls, 14 and under: 3rd: Garber, R.; 4th: Anderson, C.; 5th: Larson, J.; boys, 17 and under: 2nd: Faber, S.; 4th: Roach, J.; 5th: Blackburn, C.; girls, 17 and under: 3rd: Carter, C.; 4th: Foley, C.; 6th: Chase, J.).

The butterfly events got off to a good start with a win from the 8 and under boys (1st: Doonan, B.; 3rd: Stevenson, G.; 5th: Poh, E.). The 8 and under girls just missed the win, but took second, third and fourth (2nd: Murphy, O.; 3rd: Fontaine, E.; 4th: Jennings, M.). The 10 and under boys managed third, fourth and fifth (3rd: Doonan, P.; 4th: Cunningham, C.; 5th: Shipp, A.) while the girls finished second, third and fifth (2nd: Hernan, E.; 3rd: Meehan, S.; 5th: Campbell, A.). The 12 and under boys pulled off a first in their event, but the girls drifted back into third, fourth and fifth positions (boys: 1st: Dickinson, R.; 4th: Gammon, B.; 5th: Faber, C.; girls: 3rd: Garber, C.; 4th: Englander, E.; 5th: James, K.). The 14 and under boys managed another win in the 50-yard butterfly, and the girls finished in third, fourth and fifth positions (boys: 1st: McCarthy, W.; 2nd: Flynn, C.; girls: 3rd: Garber, R.; 4th: Orsini, M.; 5th: Mello, M.). The butterfly events finished with a second, fourth and fifth for the 17 and under boys and a second, fifth and sixth for the 17 and under girls (boys: 2nd: Ingber, D.; 4th: Blackburn, C.; 5th: Etkind, Z.; girls: 2nd: Carter, C.; 5th: Roche, A.; 6th: Kondrat, L.). By this stage Cohasset's lead had slipped from 24 to 14.

Once again the 8 and under boys came to the rescue with a win in the 25 yard breaststroke (1st: Wise, W.; 2nd: Porter, I.; 4th: Stevenson, G.). The girls didn't get the win but took second, third and fourth (2nd: Fontaine, E.; 3rd: Kelly, M.; 4th: Teague, K.). The 10 and under boys followed in third, fourth and sixth (3rd: Drybanski, J.; 4th: Musto, C.; 6th: Porter, N.). And the 10 and under girls rounded off the 25-yard breaststroke with a much needed win (1st: Fortin, S.; 3rd: Meikleham, A.; 5th: Costa, A.).

Results in the 50-yard breaststroke were variable, but with two wins and three second place finishes, Cohasset just managed to hang on to the lead (boys, 12 and under: 2nd: Zappolo, N.; 3rd: Conway, C.; 4th: Roach, K.; girls, 12 and under: 1st: Durkin, L.; 3rd: Shea, E.; 4th: Swain, K.; boys, 14 and under: 2nd: Etkind, Z.; 4th: Simms, C.; girls, 14 and under: 2nd: Anderson, C.; 3rd: Faber, S.; 6th: Scribner, J.; boys, 17 and under: 1st: Ingber, D.; 4th: Roach, J.; 6th: Blackburn, C.; girls, 17 and under: 3rd: Regan, D.; 5th: Grimm, K.; 6th: Mello, M.).

As the backstroke events began the 8 and under boys once more pulled Cohasset back from the brink with first and second place finishes (1st: Doonan, B.; 2nd: Carrier, J.; 6th: Yeager, J.). The 8 and under girls followed suit with another much needed win (1st: Karski, E.; 4th: Mahoney, M.; 5th: Kelly, M.) and the 10 and under boys and girls added to further wins to bring Cohasset back to a 27 point lead (boys: 1st: Hunt, A.; 3rd: Shipp, A.; 5th: Poh, R.; girls: 1st: Hernan, E.; 2nd: Sacks, M.; 4th: Regan, M.).

The 50-yard backstroke brought two further victories, but a series second and third places, for Cohasset, pushed Scituate back into the lead (boys, 12 and under: 2nd: Hernan, A.; 4th: Hospod, T.; 6th: Poh, R.; girls, 12 and under: 3rd: Daley, M.; 5th: Musto, L.; 6th: Shea, E.; boys, 14 and under: 1st: Previte, J.; 4th: Regan, C.; girls, 14 and under: 2nd: Larson, J.; 3rd: Marr, M.; 4th: Weston, E.; boys, 17 and under: 2nd: Golden, C.; 4th: Roach, J.; girls, 17 and under: 3rd: Foley, C.; 4th: Bugley, A.). As the backstroke races came to an end Scituate's score now stood at 264 to Cohasset's 263.

All was left to play for as the free relay events began. The 8 and under boys did it again for Cohasset, starting the relays with a win and putting the home team back in the lead (1st: Carrier, Stevenson, Durkin, T. Doonan; 3rd: Campbell, Poh, Wise, Yeager; 5th: Durkin, Jc., Durkin, Ja., Forrer, Ofsthun). The 8 and under girls finished second, third and fifth, and again Scituate took the lead by one point (2nd: Mahoney, M., Murphy, Jennings, Zappolo; 3rd: Teague, Libby, McBride, Musto; 5th: Conners, Axelson, Fortin, Culhane). The 10 and under boys were next to compete and with a first, fourth and fifth place, again nudged Cohasset ahead of Scituate (1st: Doonan, Cunningham, Poh, Hunt; 4th: Drybanski, Musto, Sceery, Wheelwright; 5th: DeGiacomo, Kuppens, McCarthy, Yeager). The ten and under girls kept the momentum going with another win (1st: Mahoney, C., Sacks, Meehan, Hernan; 2nd: Campbell, Regan, Teague, Meikleham; 5th: Coggins, Durkin, K., Foley, Wilson). The score was now, Cohasset 291, Scituate 284. With only four races to go the 12 and under boys raced to finish second and fourth (2nd: Zappolo, Dickinson, Conway, Hernan; 4th: Faber, Hospod, Gammon, Simms). Scituate were now 3 points behind Cohasset. The 12 and under girls raced next and held onto the lead, but with only a one point margin (2nd: Garber, Englander, Musto, Durkin; 3rd: Daley, Shea, Swain, Whoriskey; 6th: Guinee, Lee, Lemaire, McBride). Finally the 17 and under girls and boys took their turn in the 200 yard relays and with a second and fourth place from the boys, and a third fourth and fifth from the girls Scituate moved into the lead and finished the meet with 316 to Cohasset's 307 (boys: 2nd: Ingber, Faber, Flynn, McCarthy; 4th: Roach, Elkind, Regan, Simms; girls: 3rd: Anderson, Garber, Larson, Carter; 4th: Chase, Foley, Marr, Foley, C.; 6th: Henderson, McCarthy, Sanchez, Scribner).

What started out as a regular Friday afternoon meet, on an unseasonably dreary July day, turned out to be a truly exciting competition. Congratulations are due to the victorious Knights of Columbus. But also well done to the Cohasset swimmers for a bravely fought competition. With just one more meet before the end-of-season Championships we wish the team good luck for their Friday meet against Mask.

SPORTS NOTES

Crew Team Begins Practice

Cohasset Maritime Institute is pleased to announce that it will be sponsoring a high school crew team to compete in the open water rowing races held this fall throughout New England. Students interested in participating in this sport should contact Jack Buckley at 383-8261. Practice will start the week of August 14.

Registration for youth football and cheerleading

Registration forms for the fall 2000 Scituate/Cohasset youth football and cheerleading season may be printed off of the web site www.scicohfootball.com.

Football questions and registration forms are also available from Joe Obert at (781) 545-0854.

Cheerleading questions and registration forms are also available from Kathy Judge at (781) 545-3745.

The minimum age is 8 years old by Dec. 31, 2000; maximum age is no older than 14 in 2000.

Cohasset Youth Soccer raffle

The Cohasset Youth Soccer League is sponsoring a raffle to raise funds for the fall 2000 and spring 2001 town soccer programs. The club is raffling a classic 1966 Ford Mustang Convertible. Tickets are $5.00 each or 3 for $10.00.

Winners will be announced on Tuesday, September 5, 2000, outside Cohasset Town Hall on Highland Street. The winner need not be present to win. Maximum number of tickets available for sale is eight thousand (8,000).

To request tickets, get facts about the car and see a color photograph, visit www.mustangraffle.cjb.net. Or call 781-383-7017. You must be 18 years of age to participate.

Cohasset Soccer Club

The Cohasset Soccer Club will have a middle school team for the girls and the boys. These teams will consist of players who do not make the tryout-based school team or choose to play for the club team for other reasons (for example they might not be able to make the required school practices due to other commitments).

The soccer club will hire a professional coach who will have three to four practices during the week and play a Saturday game in the Cranberry League. There may also be a mid-week game against some of the local private school teams. There are no playoffs in the Cranberry League.

No registration for this team until the first or second week of school and the middle school teams have made their selections. The cost of the program will be $125 for the fall season (eight weeks). It is more costly than other programs because of the paid coach. The schools' "users fee" for the middle school team is less, but is also taxpayer subsidized.

Church bells to ring in unison

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

If the old saying "Every time a bell rings, an angel gets its wings" is true — then a grand-old celebration in heaven will be held this Sunday.

Beginning at 6 p.m., the bell atop the First Parish Church on the town common will be played in unison with St. Stephen's 57-bell carillon, as part of the First Parish bell's 175th birthday party.

First Parish parishioner and celebration coordinator Marjorie Hovorka said St. Stephen's carillonneur Sally Slade Warner discovered the bell's age last summer during the bell tower's renovation. While the bell was on the ground, Warner read the inscription on the bell which said it was cast by G.H. Holbrook, of Medway, in 1825. Hovorka, Shelly Donze and Jody Doyle worked together to organize the celebration, which will feature the carillon concert and ice cream, donated by the H. P. Hood Company.

On Sunday, the First Parish bell, which is pitched in B-flat, will be rung by Dr. Michael Bliss, also a parishioner of the church, during the recital's opening and closing pieces.

"I don't know if [the bells playing at the same time] has ever occurred, but its sort of like the Fourth of July in Boston with the orchestra playing and bell tolling at same time," she said. "It's going to be a very exciting time

Warner said the bell in First Parish will be tolled at "its own pendulum swing." Among the pieces to be played are four folk songs found in the Unitarian Universalist hymnal. Warner said she will also play a related musical section called "On Cohasset Common" featuring pieces entitled "On the Lawn," "Four White Ducklings," and "Trees."

The first parish building, according to John Hovorka, Marjorie's husband and head of the town's historical society, was built in 1714 by area residents tired of traveling to the Congregationalist church in Hingham. When the church's congregation outgrew the original building, a new building was built in 1747. This is the building that stands on the common today. The building was the town's original meeting place until 1825 when the church became Unitarian and the Second Congregational Church was formed.

The bell is the fourth one to ring throughout Cohasset from the historic church. The first bell was placed in First Parish's belfry in 1761, and paid for by public funds. The second bell, made partly of the original, but now weighing 600 pounds, was hung in 1767. The third bell was hung in 1791, and then resided in the building's new steeple built in 1799.

In 1825, the current bell was installed and remained hanging until last summer when the steeple underwent extensive renovations for the first time in more than 100 years.

The steeple was repaired after a lightning strike in 1869, and was not renovated again until 1999 when painters found the structure's wooden supports in dire of need of repair.

It was during this time on the ground that Warner read the bell.

Town archivist David Wadsworth said last summer that the First Parish building is "easily the most historic building in town." The Declaration of Independence was read to the town from the church's pulpit. A secret room was constructed there to store ammunition during the Revolutionary War, and the bell was rung to mark the end of every American war this century.

The bell was last rung in the fall of 1998 during the memorial service for First Parish minister, the Rev. Elizabeth Tarbox, who succumbed to cancer.

Carillon joins in special celebration

The seventh in the current summer series of eight recitals on the 57-bell carillon in the tower of St. Stephen's Episcopal Church, Cohasset, will be presented Sunday evening, Aug. 6 at 6 p.m. by Sally Slade Warner, carillonneur of St. Stephen's. Included in the varied program will be a musical celebration of the 175th anniversary of the bell in the steeple of the neighboring First Parish (Unitarian-Universalist) Church, situated on Cohasset Common. The bell, cast in 1825 by G. H. Holbrook of Medway, Mass. and pitched in B-flat, will be rung as an accompaniment to the opening and closing pieces in Warner's carillon recital, and information about the history of the bell will be distributed along with the recital programs. The First Parish Church of Cohasset was featured in the film "The Witches of Eastwick", starring Jack Nicholson.

The hour-long recital is free of charge, and will take place rain or shine. In case of rain, the audience may listen from parked cars. Printed programs, recital schedules and new brochures describing the Cohasset carillon will be available in the program stand by the church courtyard on Highland Ave., and will also be distributed on the common and at the entrance to Stagecoach Way, the pedestrian walk beside Hunneman Realty on Main St. Listeners are invited to bring picnic suppers, blankets and lawn chairs. Following the recital, a tour of the tower and carillon will be offered to all interested persons. For further information, telephone St. Stephen's Church (781) 383-1083 weekdays between 9 a.m. and 4 p.m., Church Carillonneur Sally Slade Warner, (978) 475-2599, or Assistant Carillonneur, Mary Kennedy, (781) 383-9599.

Museum is open for summer season

The Cohasset Historical Society's Maritime Museum on Elm Street at Cohasset Center is opne for its summer season. Its open season runs through September and open hours are Tuesday through Sunday, 1:30 to 4:30 p.m. There is no admission charge and donations are welcomed.

The Maritime Museum, located in the unique 18th-century Ship Chandlery originally of Samuel Bates, houses collections relating to Cohasset's maritime history, mainly from the "Age of Sail" during the 19th century. Included in its exhibits are artifacts from the town's 19th-century fishing fleets, sections devoted to shipwrecks, lifesaving and navigation, also an exhibit showing the history of the first and second Minot's Ledge Lighthouses.

Featured in museum exhibits are a number of ship models showing sailing vessels of the 19th century. The collection of models includes two of Donald McKay's East Boston-built clipper ships and a hull model of an early Cohasset fishing schooner of a type known as a "pinky," dating from the early 1800s.

The museum's second floor holds exhibits of general historical interest, ranging from Native American stone tools to an early cordwainer's desk and tools, housewright's tools, desk and chair from one of Cohasset's first schoolhouses, a display of old maps of the town and numerous other artifacts from Cohasset's early days. The old Chandlery building itself, of post and beam construction, is the only example remaining of the buildings dating from Cohasset's early years as a maritime community, and is largely unaltered.

The Cohasset Historical Society's telephone is (781) 383-1434.

Wilson House garden party

Come to a preservation garden party to benefit the historical society and restoration of the Captain John Wilson House.

There will be hors d'oeuvres and libations. Bring a friend.

Sponsored by the Cohasset Historical Society at the Lothrop House, 14 Summer St., on Sunday, Aug. 6, from 4 to 6 p.m., rain or shine. Reservations are $15 per person. Mail to the historical society, 14 Summer St.

For information call the society at 383-1434 or John Hovorka at 383-0766; Martha Gjesteby at 383-1614.

Eleventh-hour budget deal criticized

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@AOL.COM

Senator Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, criticized the inclusion of a $66.6 million line item for infrastructure improvements for the Red Line and Greenbush commuter rail line, into the final FY-2000 supplemental state budget, calling it a "raid on the general fund," and proof that the MBTA won't be able foot the bill for Greenbush restoration.

Though the bill passed the Senate unanimously, because the bill also included funding for critical items such as bullet-proof vests for police officers, Hedlund and three other senators sent a letter to Governor Paul Cellucci asking him to veto the Greenbush language.

Hedlund's objection stemmed from his concern that the language was "camouflage" to hide the legislature's insecurity about the MBTA's ability to sustain itself under the agency's new "forward-funding" budget plan. He also believes the money will be spent long before the Greenbush line becmes a reality.

"We believe it is wholly inappropriate to bypass provisions of MBTA forward funding and allow a $66 million raid upon the general fund for projects that can be funded through the MBTA's traditional capital spending mechanisms," he said in his letter. Hedlund also expressed doubt on the appropriateness of funding the Greenbush project when final permitting and community agreements have not been reached with four towns along the Greenbush corridor. "Prudent fiscal management demands an inquiry as to how operating funds can be approved for a FY-2000 budget vehicle for a project that is at least two to four years away from being constructed, if ever."

Under the new forward-funding plan, the MBTA will be given a fixed capital budget, rather than allowing the MBTA to bill the legislature at the end of the fiscal year. The MBTA's operating budget will still be made up mostly from fares and other revenue sources. The goal of switching to forward-funding, says Hedlund, is to force the MBTA to become more financially responsible.

In an interview, Hedlund took the inclusion of the provision by House leadership to mean legislators are nervous about the MBTA's economic feasibility. He said part of the hold up of last year's budget was the House wanting to include the forward-funding measure. Now, one month into forward-funding, the House has "tipped the whole plan over," said Hedlund.

"None of it will go to Greenbush," he said of the $66 million. "It was intended to give camouflage. I absolutely believe this to be recognition by the legislature's leadership that everything [former senator Pat McGovern's Blue Ribbon Commission report] was absolutely correct – you can't afford to do Greenbush under forward-funding."

He went on to characterize the money as an "attempt to stock the bank account knowing full well the MBTA won't have money when Greenbush and [the Fall River commuter line extension] come down. This flies in the face of what the legislature did last year."

Though proponents of the fund said it was an attempt to bolster the MBTA when it dips it toes into the bond market for the first time, and also characterized it as a sort of a final cash subsidy, Hedlund still disagrees with its inclusion. "The fact is, if we didn't do this, there is no way they could afford to do Red Line modernization and Greenbush."

Taking it to the top

"I think that in my conversations with the governor and lieutenant governor that they don't understand the significance of the impacts (the Greenbush line) will have," Hedlund said.

Scituate selectmen chairman Ralph Crossen said no time or day has been set for the meeting yet but he expects to be face to face with the governor within 10 days.

"We're waiting to get a date and time that works for everyone," Crossen said Tuesday.

Though the two towns are expected to meet jointly with the governor, the messages sent by the towns are anticipated to be different. Cohasset selectmen want the governor's reassurance that the MBTA will work in good faith with the town, in order to take sure Cohasset residents are protected when the trains start rolling.

"We want to just try to put the whole issue on the table have a constructive discussion on how to work together," said Cohasset selectman Michael Sullivan.

Crossen said he plans to make it clear that, in his view, Scituate does not want the train restored. "Our position is we're against the train."

Crossen said he speaks not only for the board of selectmen, but also the residents who turned out in record numbers the last time a special town meeting on the train was held, and voted to oppose the project.

"The bottom line is the project is much different now from what it was when originally proposed," he said. Crossen said he estimates as much as 80 percent of the town's residents are rail opponents and he wants Cellucci to pull the plug on the project.

The request for the meeting follows a frustrating month of rail negotiations with the MBTA, which Crossen accuses of not acting in good faith with Greenbush corridor communities in planning its $408 million commuter rail restoration.

Both Cohasset and Scituate officials were stunned last month when the transit authority pulled mitigation packages for the their towns off the table, not long after inking a more than $40 million mitigation deal with the town of Hingham. "After the arrangement was signed with Hingham, it was within a week that they decided to stop talking to Cohasset and Scituate," Crossen said. "They called it pulling in the reins."

Cohasset's mitigation committee chairman Thomas Gruber said the town wants to know if recent good faith assurances from Transportation Secretary Kevin Sullivan can be trusted (see related story).

With so much riding on the line in his town, Crossen said it's time the governor heard the communities' concerns directly from their officials. "There has never been a meeting with selectmen and the governor," he noted. "He's (Cellucci) going to hear it from Cohasset and Scituate."

MBTA ends silence, pledges to work with Cohasset

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@AOL.COM

After more than a month of waiting, Cohasset finally received a response to a letter sent to Transportation Secretary Kevin Sullivan.

On June 21, selectmen sent Sullivan a letter asking for a guarantee that the MBTA would continue "good faith negotiations," after being told earlier in the month that the MBTA was backing away from the negotiating table. But as of the board's July 25 meeting, selectmen were unhappy that neither a response, nor an acknowledgment of receipt had been received.

The town finally received a response from Sullivan July 28, which said he instructed the MBTA to continue mitigation negotiations, and insisted Cohasset would be "treated fairly, respectfully and there will be an open dialogue."

He also said he would meet with Cohasset's elected representatives on Beacon Hill within the coming month.

The same day, Cohasset received its first "weekly update" from the MBTA's senior project coordinator Kevin Dasey. According to the update, the MBTA has been reviewing the letter mitigation committee chairman Thomas Gruber sent to the MBTA in June, outlining the town's mitigation requests. "A good number of items have been agreed to by the MBTA," reported Dasey.

He also said discussions regarding the replacement of the Sohier Street well will restart, and confirmed that the review period for the upcoming "Combined Effects and Mitigation Report" from the Army Corps of Engineers will be at least three weeks.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said the town's mood was "cautious optimism," regarding Sullivan's assurance.

"We have to take him at his word," he said.

But mitigation committee chairman Thomas Gruber was a little more skeptical. "The letter itself is fine, even encouraging, but nobody has called us. We haven't heard a thing from the T," he said. "If the T wanted to change what they were doing, you'd think they'd want to call us [about setting up a meeting]."

Greenbush is the proposed third leg of the Old Colony commuter rail line, that would end in Scituate and travel through Cohasset, Hingham and Weymouth. The Plymouth and Middleboro branches have already been restored. Cohasset has not had active passenger rail service since the 1950s.

In May, the MBTA had agreed to six mitigation items, including a new well on Sohier Street, coordinated traffic lights at the Forest Avenue and King Street intersection, an emergency access bridge for Rocky Lane and a $100,000 historic preservation fund. On June 5, the town approved a 26-item mitigation list to be negotiated with the MBTA, but was informed by Dasey on June 9 that the MBTA was taking its mitigation offers off the table.

New state law means stiffer penalties for party hosts liable]. I saw a major loophole."

Cohasset Police Chief Brian Noonan praised the legislation.

"I've always been behind it. It's a good bill," he said. "It will make people pay attention to their responsibilities when they do host a party."

State Rep. Frank Hynes, D-Marshfield, who spearheaded the legislation and saw it defeated at the end of the 1998 session only to be resurrected in 1999, believes the bill will save lives thanks to Smith's tireless efforts.

"This is a tribute to his fortitude and dedication to his son Greg. He saw it as an opportunity to honor his son's memory," said Hynes. "I can't say enough about his resolve. This rectifies a loophole in the law that needed to be closed [in order that other parents will not have to endure such tragedy]."

Hynes believes Cellucci will sign the bill early next week upon his return from the Republican National Convention. Shire is also confident the bill will pass, after talking with Cellucci aides.

Said Smith, "Instead of a victim, like myself, being in the papers...with this law in place the criminal will be in the papers. It is a warning to them."

Smith said he feels betrayed by "every one of the adults" who was present at that graduation party, which reports said included a Thayer Academy teacher as well as a prominent Massachusetts physician, who allegedly played drinking games with the new graduates.

Smith feels that "supervised" parties are utterly irresponsible on the part of adults — no matter if car keys are confiscated — and they encourage teens to drink.

"That is one thing a kid doesn't have to deal with," he said. "They have enough to deal with to get through life healthy and successfully. Kids are not necessarily in safe hands when they go to an adult's home."

Smith relayed a story from a Pennsylvania attorney who assisted him with the bill.

There was a party in Pennsylvania in which parents took car keys from kids and the father made sure all the kids were dropped off so they wouldn't drive home, said Smith. They were also made to sign an agreement that stated they wouldn't drive before the father would agree to supply them with alcohol. However, as the night wore on one of the underage partygoers decided to walk home drunk and was hit by a car in the middle of the street, according to Smith, who said the story illustrates that no situation is safe when alcohol is involved.

Capt. Al Knight of the Marshfield Police Department, who was at the scene of the accident on that June night four years ago and informed the Smith family of their son's death, said the bill is a good idea and long overdue.

"This makes things a little easier for law enforcement. It doesn't shift accountability at all. It just shares accountability [between adults and minors]."

Said Smith, "Police are trying to prevent a situation in which parents get a knock on the door in the early a.m."

Greg would likely have graduated from Norwich University in Vermont this past spring and Smith said that thought is difficult to deal with.

"I keep seeing kids graduate and I think of Greg. He should be there."

Children's museum proposed for former school site

Shropshire said the project, if approved by town meeting, will hopefully be done along with renovations for the library. She also stressed the plans submitted to the selectmen are draft plans and should not be considered etched in stone.

The old Osgood School held its last class in June of 1998, following the building of the new Osgood School located behind the Deer Hill School on Sohier Street. The 21,000 square-foot building has been considered for the site of a new police station, town library and senior housing. The museum would occupy the space left unused by the new library, that was approved by town meeting.

"A two-piece system (library and museum) within the building would become a destination for families with young children and certainly for Cohasset residents that would complement each other," said Towle.

Initial plans say the museum would be designed specifically for children between the ages of two and eight and serve area communities. It would feature an indoor playground, consisting of real grass and plants, and a climbing ladder and tower allowing children to access second-floor exhibits. Also on the first floor would be a multi-purpose room for rotating exhibits, parties, functions and classroom space for the South Shore Art Center.

The second floor is designed to "provide opportunities for role playing and manipulating items to create different results," while reflecting "the nature of the surrounding community," according to the draft proposal. Planned exhibits are a general store, a lobstering exhibit, a simulated post office, and painting exhibit. In the painting exhibit, children would be allowed to paint and decorate a simulated exterior and interior room.

Renovation costs, including the interior playground and a renovation of the exterior playground, is budgeted at $580,000. Counting in costs for exhibits and the grand opening, total renovation costs are expected to reach $1 million. The plan also details specific fund-raising opportunities for the museum such as naming rights to exhibits, benches, and walkways. Roy says $300,000 has already been committed to the project and she will begin a public fundraising campaign after 60 percent of all needed funds have been privately raised.

The museum would be open five days a week, year-round, and operated by a museum director, two part-time staff and other volunteers. Roy is asking for a minimum 30-year lease, with the first few years rent free, until the museum is financially stable. Financial projections expect the museum to attract 30,000 visitors a year, similar to what other children's museums in the area attract. A net surplus is expected after three years.

The museum is expected to be discussed at the next selectmen's meeting on August 8. An RFP is required for the project because the town owns the old Osgood building.

IT'S HAPPENING

'Cinderella Smith' on stage Aug. 8-9

The Cohasset Recreation Department announces performances for "The Children's Drama Workshop's summer production of "Cinderella Smith" will be Tuesday, Aug. 8, at 10 and 7 p.m., and Wednesday, Aug. 9, at 1 and 7 p.m. at the Cohasset High School auditorium.

Written by director/producer Elizabeth Deveney, "Cinderella Smith" is based on the classic fairy tale "Cinderella" and features a wide range of modern music from Tony Bennett and The Bee Gees to Britney Spears and The Backstreet Boys.

Nearly 100 cast members (from ages 5 to 13) have been rehearsing at the Cohasset High School auditorium from 1 to 3 p.m. Tuesday - Thursday, beginning Tuesday, June 27. The CDW ensemble cast is made up of Cinderella's posse and animal friends, the Chip Charming Fan Club, the Cavalry and the Courtiers.

Founded by Elizabeth Deveney of Cohasset, who directs and produces the show again this year with the help of her sisters Grace and Sara, the Children's Drama Workshop is entering its twelfth summer in conjunction with the Cohasset Recreation Department. Past successful productions of The Children's Drama Workshop include "The Lion King" (1999), "Anastasia" (1998), "Once Upon a Time" (1997), and "Aladdin" (1996).

Tickets for "Cinderella Smith" go on sale Tuesday, Aug. 1. The cost is $8 in advance, and $9 on the day of the performance. Tickets may be purchased at the Cohasset Recreation Department. For more information, please call 383-4109.

Artistree opens

Artistree. Located at 130 King St. (Rt. 3A), Johnathan Livingston Square in Cohasset, opened its doors on Saturday, July 1, with a gala grand opening hors d'oeuvres and cocktail event. The grand opening featured a string quartet, and honored the store's many artists. Local talent to be found at Artistree include photographer Cecilia Murray of Duxbury, glass jeweler Mimi Maxwell of Kingston, potter Judy Rossman of Scituate, decoupage artist Marissa Bethony of Hingham, seaglass jewelry artist Kieli Storm Dooley of Cohasset and many more. The store's natural environment was created through the use of creative colors and textures designed by Glenn Prophet of Color Concepts in Marshfield.

Artistree specializes in funky gifts and home decorations including pottery, photography, jewelry, lightworks, blown glass, furniture, soaps, ironworks, skin creams, woodworks, greeting cards, candles, and much more.

Store hours are Monday - Saturday, 10 a.m. - 7 p.m. Call Tjona at Artistree for further information at 388-0084.

Artist workshops

The South Shore Art Center is becoming a summer destination for artists, poets, art students and cultural enthusiasts. The center's summer initiative, Visiting Artist Workshops 2000, includes master classes on poetry as well as the visual arts. Fourteen special guest instructors are offering an innovative array of workshop topics including photo imaging on fabric, book arts, altered wheelwork, watercolor plein air painting, encaustic painting, sculpture, poetry in the form of letters, and a workshop exploring movement, sound and visual imagery in creating poetry.

The instructors include: Stuart Baron, Pam Bernard, Laura Blacklow, Christopher Chippendale, Carole Ann Fer, Erica Funkhouser, Frank Gohlke, Peter Madden, Elizabeth McKim, Tracy Spadafora, Don Springer, William Ternes, Irene Valincius and Dan Wills. They are all practicing artists as well as instructors at some of the most highly regarded art schools in the area including Boston University, Harvard, the School of the Museum of Fine Arts, the Massachusetts College of Art, Haystack Mountain School of Crafts, the DeCordova Museum, the Worcester Art Museum, MIT and Lesley College.

Each poetry workshop will conclude with an evening poetry reading and all the workshops will be enhanced by an exhibition in the Bancroft Gallery entitled Prevailing Tides: Visiting Artists. The exhibition's opening reception, Friday, Aug. 4, from 6-8 p.m. is free to all and will provide the public an opportunity to meet the instructors and view some of their work. The exhibition will be on display until Sept. 6.

For more information or to register for any of the visiting artist workshops call 383-ARTS.

Farmers Market

The Farmers Market is open from 2:30-6 p.m. Thursdays through Oct.1. Call Julia Peterson at 545-6036 for more information.

Poetry at art center

Acclaimed poet Erica Funkhouser will present a poetry reading, free to the public, at the South Shore Art Center in Cohasset, Friday evening, Aug. 4 at 8 p.m. Funkhouser's poetry has appeared in "The New Yorker," "The Atlantic," "Ploughshares," "The Paris Review," "Poetry," and other magazines, as well as in her own books of poetry, "Natural Affinities," "Sure Shot and Other Poems" and "The Actual World." A lecturer in poetry at MIT, Funkhouser has also worked as a playwright and lives in Essex. Funkhouser will also present a poetry workshop on Aug. 4, Friday afternoon 1 - 4 p.m. at the art center. Her workshop entitled "Correspondences" will focus on writing poems in the form of letters. Participants will read models of letter poems from historical and contemporary sources, and write their own poems to both real and imagined recipients. The workshop, a part of the Summer Visiting Artists Workshops offered at the South Shore Art Center, is $60 ($50 for SSAC members). For more information, call: 781-383-ARTS.

The sounds of Heritage Days

Front Street music festival has something for everyone

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSO@CNC.COM

It is a three-day festival which attracts more than 10,000 people, and it all starts this weekend.

Scituate's Heritage Days get underway Friday, and once again the Front Street Music Festival promises to be one of the event's biggest draws.

For a decade now, Scituate Music Company's Gerry McMorrow and the Scituate Chamber of Commerce have been teaming up to bring a stellar entertainment lineup to the town's biggest annual celebration.

"We have a great show in store for this year. People will have the opportunity to see some great entertainers very close up."
Gerry McMorrow of Scituate Music Co.

"What's interesting about the musical line-ups at the festival is that they grow in magnitude every year," said McMorrow, who owns the Scituate Music Center and coordinates the musical entertainment of the Heritage Days celebration.

"We have a great show in store for this year," McMorrow said. "People will have the opportunity to see some great entertainers very close up."

This year's Front Street musical line up is loaded with talent. What's more, there will be varied types of music which will appeal to the most demanding musical palates.

Blues, jazz, swing, rock, — you name it, it's in the Front Street mix.

On Aug. 5, the featured bands will include The Lynch Brothers acoustic duo, singer/songwriter Tim Briggs formerly of the band Alabama, The All Star Blues Jam with special guests, and Bellvue Cadillac — a swing band from England.

On Aug. 6, the acts will include the one man jazz band George Blodgett, a nine-piece jazz band called Swinging Saxes, Boston's own Texas Blues All Stars, The Fat City Band, and John Sebastian of the legendary band The Lovin' Spoonful. On Sunday legendary drummer Buddy Miles will also play. Miles is known for his work with Jimi Hendrix's band called Band of Gypsies, and he is also known for his vocal work with Carlos Santana.

"I can also let you know there's the possibility of an unannounced visit by a very famous special guest during (Miles') set," McMorrow said.

McMorrow said last year, the one and only J.Geils showed up at the festival along with his right hand man and harmonica virtu

Put on your boogie shoes

KC and The Sunshine Band back in Music Circus lineup

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSO@CNC.COM

His name is Harry Wayne Casey, but people might know him better as "KC," legendary lead vocalist and founder of KC and The Sunshine Band.

KC and his band are on their way back to the South Shore Music Circus on Aug. 3 where they will be laying down their funk-driven disco favorites which were so popular throughout the 1970s.

Some of KC's most popular tunes include classics like "Get Down Tonight," "Boogie Shoes," "That's The Way (I Like It)," "Shake Your Booty," and "I'm Your Boogie Man."

KC and The Sunshine Band are also known for their work on the world renowned "Saturday Night Fever"soundrack, one of the best-selling disco albums ever produced. KC and his band have made 12 albums, and sold more than 75 million records.

The really good news for fans is that a new album is forthcoming.

KC is excited about the progress of the new record, and he is ready to revive that bass-thumping style which he and his band made so popular during the disco-era.

"We've been working on the new album for the past two years," KC said. "We're getting close to finishing it up. As always, we're having a ball."

The tentative title for the new album is "Yummy," but KC noted the title is subject to change. He said the band is currently trying to decide which of the many recordings they have produced will actually make it onto the album.

"Right now, we have enough material to put out three or four albums," KC said. "And we're still recording. We're also heavily involved in the selection process at the moment."

The new album, said KC, will reflect the band's older style, but it will also show some changes.

"For this album, we've gone in a bunch of different directions," he said. "It's going to be a real mixture of techno and funk, but it'll have a little bit of everything on there. All the songs are just about having a good time, because that is what we've always been about."

KC said the band has been touring on and off since 1991, and he noted his current tour will last into September.

KC said he is excited about his Music Circus gig because he has long been a fan of the area, and in addition, many members of his road crew and management team come from Massachusetts.

"I'm probably going to pick up that Massachusetts accent by the time I leave there," KC quipped." But really, I love the Boston area."

KC said although some members of his band are different, their sound

Pembroke Arts Festival 2000

A weekend of arts and entertainment for all ages

The 33rd annual Pembroke Arts Festival comes to the town green this weekend. Festival coordinators are promising quality entertainment and award-winning art and photography by local artists. The two-day event is free and open to the public.

Under the tent, in addition to the art and photography on display, there will be children's artwork, artists in action, children's face painting, as well as other children's activities.

On stage, there will be live entertainment throughout the weekend. Returning again this year is the Center Stage Dance Company, directed by Kerry Youngstrom, who will entertain with a performance of local and regional adult and teen dancers. Roger Tinckneu will please everyone with his music for all ages, encouraging participation from youngsters in the audience. National award-winning Pembroke School of Performing Arts (directed by Kathleen Kelble) returns also this year, with local and regional children presenting a dance concert both Saturday and Sunday.

For those who like bluegrass, Pudding Brook Band will provide two hours of bluegrass music. An acoustic mix will be performed by Three Wheel Drive, a slightly different twist to local audience pleasers Red, White, and Blues, who will also be appearing at the festival. If it's jazz you like, don't miss the John Souza Jazz Band, who have gained recognition as one of the hottest jazz bands in the Greater Boston area. Saturday night featured entertainment this year will be Avenue X, a five-person acappella group who have been performing for several years around the Boston to Cape Cod area. Avenue X has appeared on national TV, Plymouth waterfront concert series, Plymouth Thanksgiving Celebration Parade, and numerous other concerts and functions.

Avenue X will perform a capella, Do Wop and beyond at the 33rd annual Pembroke Arts Festival this weekend. The group will perform from 8 to 10 p.m. Saturday, Aug. 5. The festival will be held on the Town Green, Route 14 in Pembroke Center. The festival is free and open to the public. For more information call (781) 294-8941.

Stuffed zucchini worth eating

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

Christopher Kimball

Even the idea of stuffed zucchini strikes many home cooks with horror. Flabby, overcooked zucchini halves stuffed with a greasy, flavorless filling. What could be less inspiring? The fundamental problem with this dish is the main ingredient. Since zucchini is mostly water, it ends up soggy, not firm. And the filling, well, it needs to be robust and well seasoned to make up for its rather bland container. If these problems could be overcome, the result would be more than worthwhile — an all-in-one supper of meat and vegetables that transforms a simple summer garden staple into something extraordinary.

My first attempt to bake a filling in raw zucchini ended up a watery mess. The solution was to follow the lead of an article in my magazine, Cook's Illustrated, which suggested that the zucchini be cut in half, seeded, brushed with olive oil, and then roasted cut-side down in a 400 degree oven for about 12 minutes. The zucchini was still firm, not watery, and now ready for filling. I also find that adding salt and pepper before roasting was less effective than seasoning just before stuffing, since any seasoning disappears with the escaped liquid during the initial oven time.

The next question was the selection of starch for the stuffing. The three choices were rice, potatoes, and bread crumbs. The latter was lacking in flavor, and the potatoes were good but required extra work (they also had to be cooked perfectly to make an acceptable stuffing); the rice was the clear winner because of its taste and texture. I knew that some sort of meat would also be necessary. I tested ground pork, beef, and lamb. The beef and lamb were fine; the pork had little flavor.

The next question was how to assemble this dish in an easy, logical manner. I started by browning the ground meat, removing it from the pan, and then pouring off the excess fat. Next I sautéed onion, added minced garlic and then decided to add a bit of chopped tomato. I tested both canned and fresh and found that either works well. Now I had to add the rice, and I knew from previous work on rice cookery that it is best to coat the raw kernels with oil before cooking to keep them from becoming too sticky. So, I added the rice directly to the sauté pan and stirred to coat the grains with fat. (Long-grain white rice was best. Basmati was insufficiently starchy to bind the other ingredients, and short-grain rice was too glutinous.) At this point, I added chicken stock (which is more flavorful than water) along with the cooked meat, simmered the mixture covered for 15 minutes, and then took it off the heat and let it sit an additional 10 minutes. (This gently cooks the rice and keeps it from becoming either overcooked or too starchy.) A few last-minute additions to the stuffing were a bit of grated Parmesan and chopped parsley, and, of course, salt and pepper. All that was left was to spoon the filing into the shells and put the stuffed zucchini into the oven. The stuffed zucchini heated through in just 6 minutes.

REALLY GOOD STUFFED ZUCCHINI

Preroasting the cut zucchini halves in a 400-degree oven for 12 minutes gets rid of the excess water, making them firm and flavorful. You can use either beef or lamb.

4 medium zucchini (about 8 ounces)
4 tablespoons extra-virgin olive oil
1/2 pound ground beef or lamb
Salt and freshly ground pepper
2 tablespoons unsalted butter
1 medium onion, diced
1 medium or 2 small cloves garlic, minced
1 cup long-grain rice
1 cup diced tomatoes, canned or fresh (Muir Glen preferred if using canned)
1 1/2 cups homemade or low-sodium chicken broth
1/2 cup freshly grated Parmesan cheese
1/4 cup chopped fresh Italian flat leaf parsley

1. Adjust one oven rack to the upper-middle position and one to the lowest position. Place a rimmed baking sheet on the lower oven rack, and heat the oven to 400 degrees.

2. Meanwhile, halve each zucchini lengthwise. With a small spoon, scoop out the seeds and some of the flesh so the walls are 1/4 inch thick. Brush the cut sides of the zucchini with 2 tablespoons of the olive oil and set cut-side down on the heated baking sheet. Roast until zucchini feels slightly softened but still firm, about 12 minutes. Remove from oven and flip halves over (cut-side up) and set aside.

3. Heat 1 tablespoon olive oil over high heat in a large skillet with a lid. When the oil shimmers, add the meat and brown well, about 7 minutes. Season with salt and pepper and break apart into small pieces while browning. Remove meat to paper towels to drain. Pour off excess fat. Reduce heat to medium.

4. Add the remaining 1 tablespoon olive oil and 2 tablespoons butter to pan. Once the butter has stopped foaming, add the onion and cook, stirring occasionally, until the onion has begun to turn golden brown, about 10 minutes. Season with salt and pepper, add the garlic, and cook 2 minutes more. Add rice and stir well to evenly coat with the butter and oil. Add the tomato and cook another 2 minutes, stirring frequently and being careful to not brown the rice. Add the browned meat and chicken stock and stir to combine. Cover and cook for 15 minutes. Remove from heat and let sit, covered, for 10 minutes. Uncover pan, add the cheese and parsley, combine well, and taste for seasonings. Season the zucchini halves with salt and pepper. Spoon filling into each half and lightly pack. Return zucchini to the oven on upper rack and bake until heated through and just beginning to brown, about 6 minutes.

Serve immediately. Serves 4 as a main dish or 8 as a side dish.

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

Most people are already familiar with astrological sun signs – those presumed indicators of personality and future. There are, however, much more telling influences, as anyone who has studied astrology knows.

I try to do something a little different with my astrological forecasts. I like to compare astrology with meteorology. Just as meteorologists predict the physical weather – if there will be sun or precipitation – an astrologer can forecast the mental and emotional weather ahead.

A meteorologist tells you whether to bring an umbrella or sunglasses to work. By charting the course of the heavens and the various effects of celestial spheres on the human condition, I can tell you what type of day we are likely to have and how people are likely to react. My goal is to help you be prepared for the week ahead.

TUESDAY, AUG. 1

Planetary patterns in August promise mild and sunny astrological weather. Plans should come together easily; you can move forward in business or personal ventures. Today the Cancer moon becomes inactive at 8:34 a.m., when it aligns with Saturn. A Virgo moon takes over at 9:27 a.m., making for a day that holds high potential for productivity. In addition, an applying alignment of the sun and Pluto prompts you to focus on areas of your life you want to change, and initiate new ideas or programs.

WEDNESDAY, AUG. 2

Roll up your sleeves and plan to get a lot accomplished today. The moon travels in meticulous Virgo. Get your life in order. Tackle jobs you've placed on the back burner and get them out of the way. Influences are prime for new starts, particularly regarding diets, exercise, physical fitness. This is also a favorable time for signing contracts and making important decisions.

THURSDAY, AUG. 3

The green light is on for new beginnings before 10:50 a.m., when the Virgo moon forms a flowing 120-degree contact to stable Saturn and becomes inactive. A Libra moon takes over at 11:31 a.m., generating an upbeat mood. However, an applying alignment of Venus and Saturn warns against making impulsive decisions or purchases. Lunar alignments to Neptune and Jupiter make this evening prime for social activities, romantic rendezvous.

FRIDAY, AUG. 4

The Libra moon forms harmonious contacts to Pluto, the sun and Uranus today. You can make gains developing projects that need support or cooperation from others. The focus is on partnership/relationship matters. This is a time when you can work out difficulties you may be experiencing with others. Open the doors to a higher level of communication. The evening rates high for parties, romance.

SATURDAY, AUG. 5

This weekend has its ups and downs. A positive attitude is your ace in the hole. Avoid limited thinking; be more aware of and try to change negative habits. Today the Libra moon continues active travel until 2:56 p.m. A serious Scorpio moon takes over at 5:04 p.m. and forms challenging 90-degree alignments to Mars and Neptune this evening. Keep your feet on the ground and don't take risks. People may be argumentative, impatient, temperamental. Know when it's time to call it a night.

SUNDAY, AUG. 6

Wake up in a good mood. Take extra time out for yourself; pursue activities that help you to relax and maintain a positive attitude. Others may be moody, obsessive. Keep a low profile. A stressful 90-degree alignment of Venus and Saturn occurs at 9:24 a.m. At 1:33 p.m. Venus moves into Virgo, remaining there until August 30. The first quarter phase of the moon occurs at 9:02 p.m. A full moon is building up and will culminate August 15. A harmonious alignment of Mercury and Saturn makes this evening prime for problem-solving, decision-making.

MONDAY, AUG. 7

Conflicting planetary influences can make for an exhausting day. The moon continues to travel in Scorpio, generating a serious, intense mood. The planet Mercury moves into the sign Leo at 1:42 a.m., remaining there until August 22. An applying polarity of Mars and Neptune urges you to avoid launching ventures or starting activities. Things may not be as they appear, you may not have all the facts. Plan a quiet evening. Get extra rest.

Dear friends and potential new customers of The Fieldston:

After six and a half years as owner of The Fieldston and with some inconsistencies with several chefs, I've decided to take on the culinary responsibilities as head chef. I have no formal training for the position, but I have a passion for cooking and a heartfelt desire to please and satisfy every one of my customers. With the help of Eric Tranfaglia, a Marshfield resident and Newbury Culinary student, as my assistant, and your support, suggestions, constructive criticism and compliments, I hope to make your next and every dining experience at The Fieldston a special one.

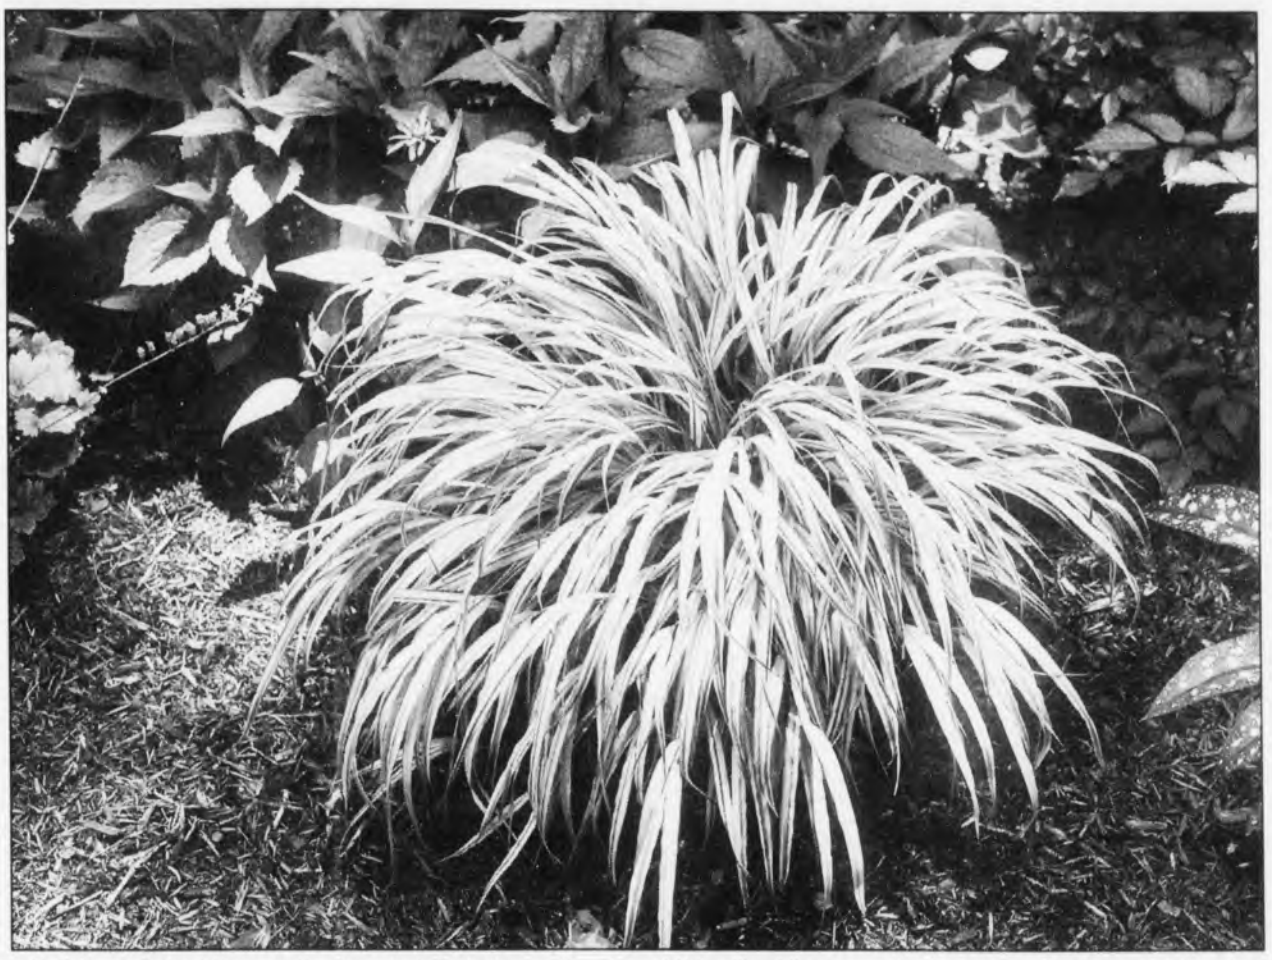
PART II - DAZZLING GOLD-TINTED PLANTS

Few moments in a gardener's day compare to the thrill of discovering a hummingbird hovering at your flowers, so close that you can witness the tiny creature sipping from each tubular bloom and observe its iridescent, green plumage. Throughout the past week, this wondrous, magical, little bird has been present nearly every time I have ventured into the garden to plant, weed or deadhead, making these tasks all the more pleasurable.

Perhaps my excitement stems from the unique ability of our smallest bird to appear as if it were dancing on puppet strings as it partakes of sweet nectar. Suspended in midair among the flowers, its rapidly-beating wings are a blur as it probes each tubular flower. I anticipate its daily visits with delight. It seems to intentionally announce its arrival nearly face to face, prior to darting about the perennial border to sample a multitude of flowers including bee balm, loosestrife, Rose-of-Sharon, phlox, salvia, geraniums, butterfly bush and cardinal flower, all the while carrying on a distinctive conversation as it twitters and gurgles as it flits from flower to flower.

As I pursue my tiny visitor through the garden on a dreary, damp afternoon, I find my eye continually drawn to the bright, golden foliage which, despite overcast skies, seems to glow and demand attention in nearly every border. In my earlier years, I had an aversion to plants with gold foliage as I imagined they appeared sickly, as if suffering from nitrogen deficiency, but in recent years I have come to recognize their value to brighten, enhance and offer contrast in a sea of green leaves. Once I realized how much gold foliage contributed to my overall color scheme, gold-tinted leaves have been incorporated into nearly every planting, from my foundation shrubbery to the mixed perennial border.

In the shady border, where foliage color and texture, rather than the brilliance of flowers, tend to predominate, the radiant yellow-green leaves of ornamental grasses, lamium and hosta add an essential element to the design. Gold leaves give the shady garden pizzazz! Numerous hosta cultivars are available ranging in color from lime green to pale gold, depending on the amount of sunlight the plant receives. If a gold-leafed hosta is exposed to direct sunlight, particularly in the afternoon, it is more likely to turn gold, yellow or even bleach out to near-white, while in total shade the same plant may appear pale green. Hosta Gold Standard is a prime example, exhibiting large lime-green leaves rimmed with a deep green border in full shade, fading to near white in full sun. Other handsome gold hosta cultivars include Daybreak, Golden Prayers, Piedmont Gold, August Moon, September Sun and a giant-leafed variety, Sum and Substance.



Try a few gold-leafed plants in your landscape. Their colorful foliage will add a magical touch of color and will transform a dull, monotonous planting into a vibrant, exciting panorama.

A handsome companion to the broad leaves of blue, green, or variegated hostas, the ornamental grasses add a fine-textured contrast. Hakone grass (Hakonechloa) is streaked yellow and green and gradually forms a soft, mop-like mound. A golden sedge, Carex (Bowles Golden) provides a more upright clump, its narrow blades edged with a deeper green. Both perform best in dappled to full shade in moisture-retentive soils.

In the shady border, where foliage color and texture, rather than the brilliance of flowers, tend to predominate, the radiant yellow-green leaves of ornamental grasses, lamium and hosta add an essential element to the design. Gold leaves give the shady garden pizzazz!

An equally lovely complement to hostas and other shade-loving perennials are the Lamiums. Low, mat-forming groundcovers which keep their foliage well into the colder months and reappear early each spring, there are several gold-tinted varieties. Lamium (Beedhams White) is especially attractive with bright yellow leaves having a white midrib and white flowers. Hostas and bronze-leafed coral bells underplanted with this cultivar are spectacular. Another rampant, but attractive gold groundcover which can be used effectively in sun or shade is golden creeping Jenny, Lysimachia nummularia (Aurea).

For sunnier locales, golden oregano or golden thyme can be planted to furnish bright mats of lighter foliage. There are any number of perennials which offer gold-leafed cultivars including a two-tone columbine, Aquilegia (Lime Frost), a golden low-growing veronica, and a handsome, gold and green striped Yucca known as Gold Sword.

In the realm of woody plants, there is an abundance of deciduous and evergreen trees and shrubs to provide a colorful contrast to the green, blue or burgundy foliages in our foundation plantings and throughout the landscape. Golden evergreen representatives include junipers, like the stunning, spreading Mother Lode, many types of cypress (Chamaecyparis spp.), including the delightful thread-leaf cypress Golden Mops, arborvitae, and other fabulous dwarf conifers and large specimen trees.

A number of elegant, deciduous shrubs can be used to add the "Midas Touch" to your landscape which may serve as a singular focal point or can be repeated in several locations to provide rhythm to your design. The Spirea family presents several handsome introductions including Gold Mound and Gold Flame' which form dense mounds with a long season of pink fluffy flowers. Golden batberries offer yet another bright contrast to monochromatic green plantings.

Try a few gold-leafed plants in your landscape. Their colorful foliage will add a magical touch of color and will transform a dull, monotonous planting into a vibrant, exciting panorama.

Brudnoy AT THE MOVIES

Nutty Professor II: The Klumps (C+)

How do the makers of this movie get Eddie Murphy, gussied up as all five of the gargantuan, vulgar, oddly sweet Klumps, into the same scene, together, over and over again? Like a kid wondering how the movies got King Kong on top of the skyscraper, I wonder, with kid-like amazement, at the magic of the movies. (This sustains me in my decades-long quest for the perfect film.)

Murphy, who by all accounts is an absolutely impossible person in real life, is an absolutely brilliant comic performer and invests these grotesques with a magic believability that totally overshadows the attempt by Martin Lawrence, in "Big Momma's House," to do something along these lines, which involves tons of latex and other elements of terrific make-up artistry. We have never seen anything like this, save for the small hint of what can be done with the technique in the first "Nutty Professor," that is, Murphy's version of it, not the Jerry Lewis original, still a classic.

That said, what is left of "Nutty Professor II: The Klumps?" It is a molasses-paced romance, between a fellow professor, Denise (Janet Jackson takes the girlfriend role this time, not Jada Pinkett, and her forte is not so much acting as furrowing her brow when brow-furrowing is called for and beaming ecstatically when the director shouts, "Beam!"), and Sherman Klump, the even more intelligent professor, who is working on a youth-restoring compound in his laboratory, aided by his devoted assistant (John Ales). Sherman knows that he is no hard-body hunk, but Denise sees beyond this, into his inner Sherman. Unfortunately for Sherman, and also for the film, inside him is his alter ego, the obnoxious Buddy Love — a mercy for Murphy in that Buddy looks just like Murphy, meaning no make-up horrors. Buddy has now separated almost entirely from Sherman and is up to no good and wants in one the youth-restoring formula. The remaining character of note is the college dean (Larry Miller, who has mastered exasperation as his primary characteristic), oozing insincerity.

The story floats off into fitfully amusing side-bars, such as one female Klump's confusing Buddy Love for a hired male stripper, and another's romance with a nearly desiccated geezer. There's also the endless huffing and puffing of Sherman's father and older brother, who, even worse than the sometimes incomprehensible mom and grandmother, are so mush-mouthed that subtitles into English would be useful. Even the audience I saw it with, literally all but me black and primarily sub-teenaged, had some difficulty comprehending what the incessantly shouting, harrumphing Klumps were saying. Like "Scary Movie," the humor here is primarily obsessed with defecation, flatulence and phalluses, also, here, with fatness and decrepitude, a recipe designed for moviegoers of limited sophistication but limitless appetite for cheap thrills. Boffo box office expected.

SOUTH SHORE REAL ESTATE

There's payback in modest home repairs

Don't count on costly renovations

By Paula Woodhull
PWOODHULL@CNC.COM

Thinking about selling your house but nervous about pouring a lot of money into expensive improvements?

Pay attention to those second thoughts.

Real estate professionals around the country say that relatively low-cost home repairs and renovations can pay off in a surprisingly big way when it comes to sealing the real estate deal and recouping your investment.

Some 2 million American homeowners are putting their houses on the market every month but many are likely to be disappointed when they don't see the desired return on costly home repairs.

That's the word from California-based HomeGain which watches national real estate trends.

HomeGain talked to real estate agents around the country and found that modest home improvements, costing as little as $80 and as much as $3,000, scored the highest returns when it actually came to getting top dollar for the sale of an existing home.

HomeGain also found that making reasonable repairs avoided a home inspector red flagging thousands of dollars of repairs after a selling price has been agreed upon. Ouch.

The typical listing surveyed by HomeGain was a three-bedroom, two bath home with 1,892-square-feet of living space, selling for $201,798.

Based on responses from realtors, HomeGain found that "lightening and brightening" — sprucing and tidying up — living areas at a bargain basement cost of a couple hundred dollars paid off handsomely with an increase in sale price of $750 to $950.

Heavy duty cleaning of rugs and floors and removing household and yard clutter at a cost of $350 can yield a whopping added return on the sale price of slightly more than $2,000.

Minor plumbing and electrical fix-ups can calculate into a $1,500 windfall or more when a house is sold.

Basic landscape and trim work in the yard can boost the selling price by as much as $1,800.

Painting interior walls at a cost of $1,500 yields a $2,600 increase. Similarly, a homeowner can double his or her return by making a $2,500 investment in kitchen and bath upgrades and facelifts.

Real estate professionals around the country say that relatively low-cost home repairs and renovations can pay off in a surprisingly big way when it comes to sealing the real estate deal and recouping your investment.

Thinking about repairing floors at a cost of $1,500? That could mean pocketing an extra $3,000 at selling time. Exterior painting and replacing carpets add another $3,500 to the selling price.

Of course, doing some of this work yourself means an even bigger payoff when a house is sold.

"Forget about remodeling the kitchen or building a new deck out in the backyard before you sell," said Bradley Inman of HomeGain.

"It sometimes takes years for those things to pay off. It's the little things that help homeowners yield top dollar and improve the 'salability' of their home."

Realtors consulted by HomeGain advised sellers to forego big renovation projects and focus instead on the basics, such as cleaning windows and siding, scrubbing bricks, stripping wallpaper and hauling clutter from the property.

IN BRIEF

Conway brokers sale of Accord Park office building

Conway Commercial vice president Paul Durgin, vice president of Conway Commercial, recently brokered the sale of 45 Accord Park Drive in Norwell.

The professional building, located in Accord Park at the junction of Routes 2 and 228, consists of approximately 9,600 square feet on two levels. It is situated on 1.7 acres of land surrounded by a mix of office, research and development and warehouse properties.

Durgin represented the seller, Executive Realty Trust, and procured the buyer, Accord Park Realty Trust, in the $700,000 transaction. The building was fully occupied at the time of sale.

Conway Commercial is a division of Norwell-based Jack Conway & Co. Founded in 1957, Conway employs more than 600 agents in 37 offices from Boston to Cape Cod. The organization recently was named the 77th largest realty company in the United States by Realtor Magazine, the official publication of the National Association of Realtors.

Area residents complete real estate licensing course

Several area residents recently completed a five-week course on the fundamentals of real estate sales at the Conway Country School of Real Estate.

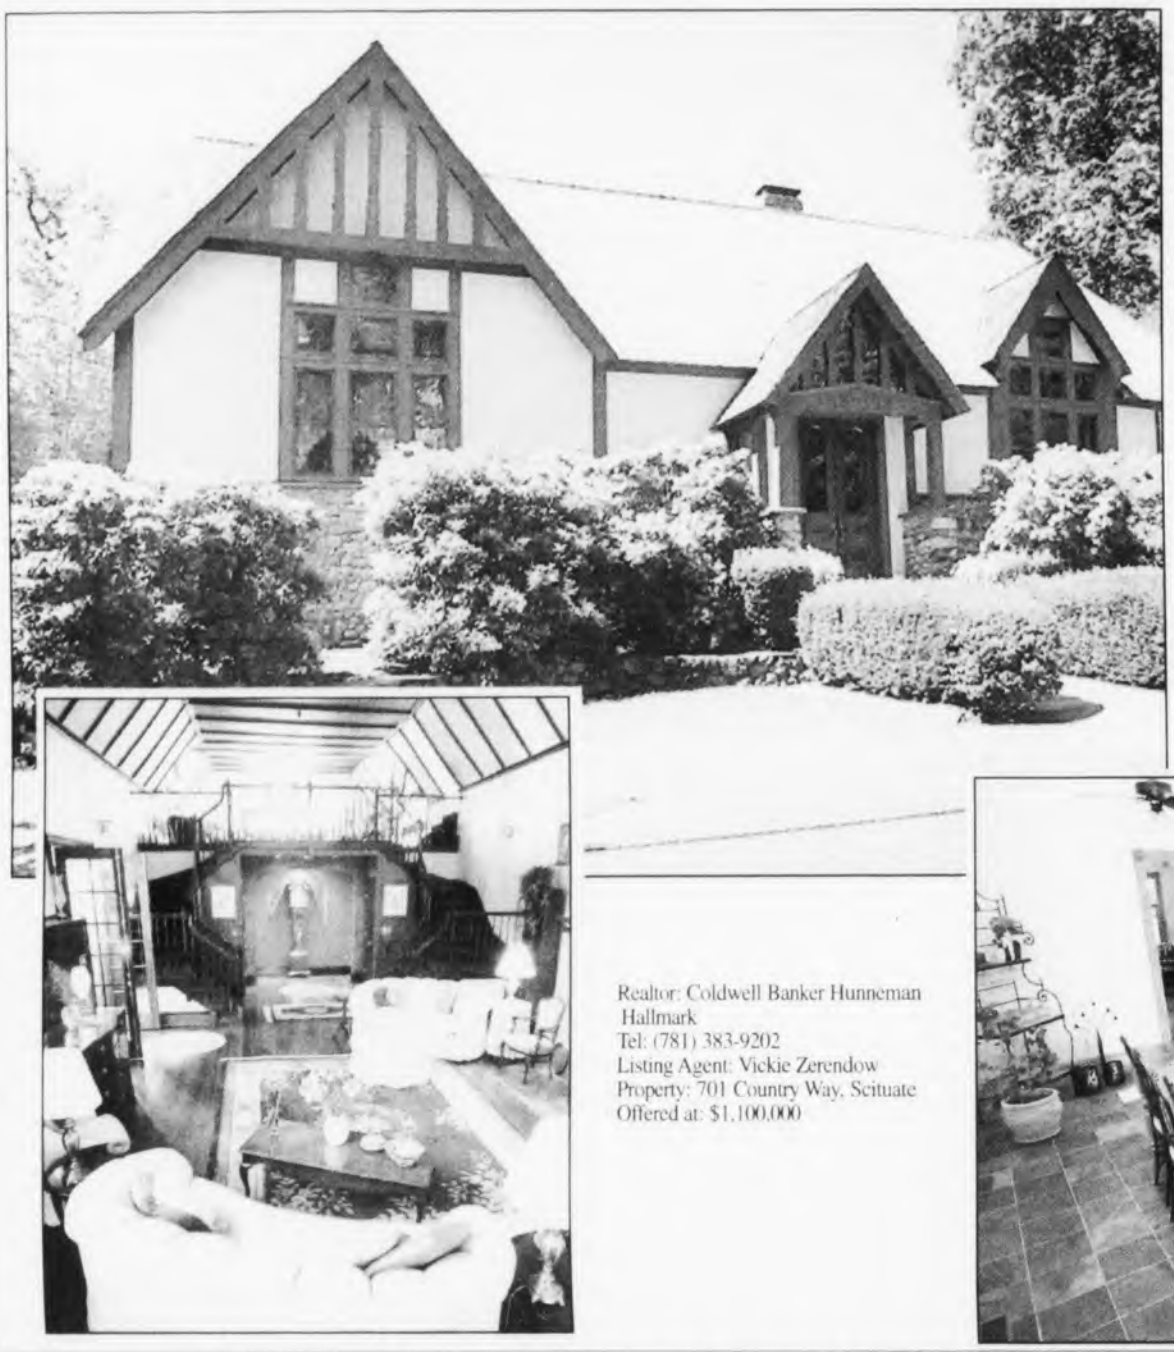
Prime Real Estate



Library landmark feels just like home

Among Scituate's most sublime and elegant estates, locals remember the handsome building at 701 Country Way as it was once home to the former Pierce Library.

Today the historic property is a glorious and one-of-a-kind home for sale.

All recent upgrades have been completed with an eye for detail and in close keeping with the home's inherent antique beauty, and today the new blends smoothly with the old.

Stone walls beautify the neatly landscaped front yard, while true Tudor style defines the home's exterior.

This property lies in close proximity of not only quaint North Scituate Village, but also the lush 100-acre woods known as the Ellis Estate.

Moving forward and through the second set of double French doors, the grandiose formal living room is where one receives his first sense of the high raised mahogany paneling and exquisite period woodwork abundant throughout the home.

A sunny, slate-floored sitting room links the old home to new. Beyond, a second cozy family room awaits, and there the natural woodwork and slate flooring continue.

In the gourmet kitchen beyond, modern conveniences are not sacrificed.

Touring the second floor, the four brightly "faux" painted bedrooms feature ceiling fans, soothingly light oak floors and plenty of closet storage space.

The level's third sleeping chamber just might be mistaken for the master with its several windows, sweeping feel and sheer size, but surprisingly there's one still grander. The country-inn-caliber master bedroom boasts lofty ceilings, a walk-in closet, and with a flick of the switch, instant gas fireplace ambiance.

Additionally located on the second level is a second full bath.

IN BRIEF

Conway Commercial sells office/retail complex in Pembroke

Conway Commercial was the sole broker in the sale of Brick Kiln Place, a 27,000-square-foot office/retail complex located on Route 139 in Pembroke.

The property consists of five adjoining buildings that are fully occupied with a mix of retail, medical, and professional tenants.

The complex is situated on 2.7 acres of land.

Conway Commercial Vice President Paul Durgin represented the seller, Russell Gardner, and procured the buyer, Brick Kiln Place LLC. The sale price of the high-visibility property was $1.57 million.

Conway Commercial is a division of Norwell-based Jack Conway & Co. Founded in 1957, Conway is the largest independently owned real estate firm in Massachusetts, with more than 600 agents in 37 offices from Boston to Cape Cod.

The organization recently was named the 77th largest realty company in the United States by REALTOR® Magazine, the official publication of the National Association of Realtors.

Tips for hurricane season

During a hurricane, emergency management officials advise people to remain indoors, staying on the side of the house opposite the direction of the wind. Move as the wind shifts, and stay away from windows and glass doors.

If evacuation is necessary, leave as quickly as possible, lock the house, and watch out for flooded roads and bridges.

Bring pre-assembled emergency supplies, such as clothing, blankets or sleeping bags. Take your pets. Leaving them behind can be dangerous, but most emergency shelters will not allow animals.

Pre-assembled emergency supplies should meet family needs for three days. That should include enough water and food that won't spoil; a change of clothing and footwear and bedding for each person; a first aid kit with family prescription medicines; emergency tools such as a flashlight with extra batteries and a battery-powered radio; an extra set of car keys, a credit card, cash and traveler's checks; sanitation supplies, and special items for infant and elderly family members.

Keep the car filled with gasoline, as pumps will not work without electricity, just as ATM machines will be inoperable.

Information is current as of July 24, 2000. For information on specific mortgage programs, call the lender. Rates, points, and programs are subject to change daily and cannot be guaranteed. Points include discount fees and origination fees. Quotes = rate+total points/APR (annual percentage rate); calculated as follows: conventional 20% down and $100,000 mortgage; jumbo 20% down and $252,700 mortgage; FHA 3%-5% down and $100,000 mortgage. Most quotes are for 30-day lock-ins, but can vary. Maximum conventional loan amount is $252,700; jumbo loans are in excess of $252,700. ARM-adjustable rate mortgage. ARM rates are quoted as follows: rate+total points/APR (type of ARM program is listed in parentheses). LTV-loan to value. MI-mortgage insurance. NA-not available. NQ-rates not quoted. Lenders, to be listed in this paid advertised column, call 480-905-8000 or 1-800-CNS-8525. Mortgage rates and programs are updated online daily. Express train service down the road

Q. I'm a train buff and I've been waiting patiently to ride Amtrak's new Acela train between Boston and Washington. Do you have any update on when it's finally going to debut? I just read an article in the July Travel & Leisure magazine that said it was supposed to be in July, but Amtrak tells me the train isn't ready yet.

A. Acela Express' launch has been pushed back several times due to technical problems, and is now far behind schedule. According to an Amtrak spokesperson, late August or early September is the soonest you can expect to ride this new high-speed service.

There was a problem with the wheels, but that's been corrected, and then a problem with the tilting mechanism, also corrected. Then there was a problem with some sheared-off bolts holding the traction motor to the frame. Even so, Amtrak has begun operating its slower Acela Regional service in the Northeast Corridor, and travel times are much faster than before (sometimes the Boston-New York train arrives 20 minutes early, and takes just three and one-half hours).

Once the Express service begins, which travels Boston-New York in three hours, it won't make much sense to fly between the two cities.

Q. I wanted to get my parents some kind of travel-related item for their 50th wedding anniversary in August. The only thing I can think of is a senior pack from the airlines, which has four one-way coupons.

I thought I had once read about a different kind of senior travel option where you could buy unlimited air travel for 30 days. Do you know anything about that?

A. Continental, like most big airlines, sells these four-coupon senior packs for $579 (some smaller airlines charge less). They make great gifts for seniors, although they have to be used within a year. Continental used to offer unlimited senior travel for 90 days. It was a great deal, which is perhaps why the program was discontinued.

Q. In June, my wife and I went round-trip Los Angeles-London on Air New Zealand (a United Airline alliance member) and they recorded our MileagePlus numbers for frequent-flier mileage. Upon our return, UAL told me they cannot give me any mileage because we had "U" grade tickets. This doesn't seem fair as nothing was said prior to the trip.

Is there anything I can do?

A. This is a common problem. Many "partner" airlines only give mileage on higher-priced tickets, and never on consolidator or auction-type fares (in fact, you never get miles on auction tickets, whether or not it's not a partner airline situation). It's probably in the fine print of the materials United sent you when you signed up for MileagePlus.

It's always a good idea to ask if your trip qualifies for mileage before bothering to give your frequent-flyer number, but I doubt you would have offered to pay more for your ticket just to get the miles, since it's seldom worth it.

Q. I am an extensive world traveler and I thought I'd had most airline rules and regulations figured out, but there is one that is bothering me.

On two separate occasions, I have had to cancel trips booked with "nonrefundable" tickets that had already been issued. Fortunately, the carriers told me they could issue credit for the unused tickets for a $75 change fee.

In one case, I changed my itinerary on Alaska Airlines to a closer destination. The fare quoted for the new destination was $100 cheaper than the old destination. They refused to issue me credit for the difference and, in addition, charged me the $75 change fee.

If the new flight had been more expensive than the old, I would have had to pay the difference, plus the change fee. I had the same experience with America West Airlines on a different flight. Neither airline would credit the difference between a higher and lower fare toward the $75 change fee.

It doesn't seem right that the airlines pocket the difference when it's in their favor and then charge the difference when the new flight is more expensive.

Are there any rules governing this matter?

A. Alaska and America West are the only two major airlines I know about that won't refund the difference in a situation like this. However, if you hadn't changed your travel plans (and the fare had merely gone down on your original itinerary), they may have refunded you the difference, minus the change fee. Airline tickets remain one of the few things you can buy that come with a no-refund policy.

Many retail stores have price protection guarantees, without a penalty, when a price goes down within a certain period after the sale. Airlines should offer the same thing, and follow the lead of Southwest Airlines, which maintains the most liberal ticket reissue and refund policy in the business: if a fare goes down, they refund the difference without penalty, period and, if you cancel a nonrefundable ticket, they'll apply the full fare to a future flight.

The sounds of Heritage Days

oso Magic Dick.

But McMorrow said no matter what, Front Street will be jamming with a veritable feast for the ears.

"The music always sounds excellent in the street," he said. "And it's free! Anyone can come and go as they please. If they don't like a certain band, they can check out a different one later."

One aspect of the festival which McMorrow is especially excited about is the fact the popular cable channel known as the QVC network will be broadcasting live from the Heritage Days festival, making Front Street a household name all over the country and the globe.

"QVC broadcasts all over the world," he said. "That's pretty exciting to know that many eyes will be upon us."

McMorrow said he is thrilled about hosting this year's music festival, but he said he always gets excited about it. After all, he has been involved with it for the past 10 years.

Even before he officially launched the Front Street Music Festival, McMorrow has always been involved with presenting live music on the streets of Scituate.

"I used to get people to play on the side of the street during the 70s," he said. "That's just something I did when I opened my shop. When the (chamber of commerce) decided to pursue the musical aspect of the festival, the musical acts just get bigger and bigger."

"The Front Street Music Festival is huge," said chamber of commerce director/Heritage Days co-chairman Nina Belsan. "Gerry does a fabulous job."

The Fat City Band will appear at Scituate's Heritage Days festival.

"Gerry always puts together a great assortment of music. It's one of the main attractions at the Heritage Days festival," said Heritage Days co-chairman Charlotte Phinney.

And music isn't the only reason to plan on visiting Sctiuate this weekend. The craft fair, sidewalk sales, and a host of children's activities make Heritage Days a real family affair. The Luminaria cruise has become another popular form of entertainment for the weeekend.

"Heritage Days is actually just a big get-together," Belsan said of the weekend-long event. "Older people, young families, they're all there. Every year, people turn out from all the South Shore towns and just say 'Wow, what a great time,' and they always come back year to year. It's really terrific."

For more information on the Heritage Days Front Street Music Festival call Scituate Music Center at (781) 545-9800.

is still the one people have known and loved since the group was founded in 1973 when they were known as KC and The Sunshine Junkanoo Band. KC said his Music Circus audience can expect a little bit of everything.

"We'll definitely be playing all the old stuff," he said. "We'll also be playing some more obscure material, and some new things as well. It's basically going to be a high energy show which lasts about 90 minutes."

Of the band's overall sound, KC said "It's kind of like the music from the 50s, 60s, 70s, all rolled into one." He added he feels the band's sound is not out of style.

"There seems to be a resurgence of the 70s going on right now in the music industry," he said "In fact, it's like time stood still. I think people today will definitely be into what we're doing as a band. I feel partly responsible for the way music is today. Technically, we're a lot more advanced now, so we can do more things. But people will hear the new album, and they'll know it's KC and The Sunshine Band."

KC's music has been used in a number of commercial advertisements over the years including ads for Budweiser and Burger King.

"Our music has been used to sell a lot of things," he said. "It's been used to sell things like toothpaste, pizza, and even gasoline. A lot of artists think that kind of exposure is demeaning, but I think the exact opposite. I think it's flattering."

As to why his music has not been outgrown by the general public, KC said "Our music makes people feel good, and it reminds people of a happier time. I think people like advertisers like to associate with that kind of feeling."

And KC finds inspiration for his "good feeling" music in various places.

"I find inspiration to write music everywhere," he said. "In the bathroom, in the car, in airplanes, in bedrooms, and in nightclubs. Everywhere. For me, writing music starts with a good lyric line, something that just lifts me up. Then, it's about coming up with a fun sound and a good beat. That's all the inspiration I need."

For KC and The Sunshine Band, it is only the beginning.

"The future is totally wide open for us," KC said. "I'm just going to let it ride, and go where this whole thing takes me, just like I always have. I'm still living my dream, and I'll tell you, it definitely beats sitting at home."

For information on KC and The Sunshine Band's Aug. 3 show call the South Shore Music Circus at (781) 383-9850.

Providing TIPS for parents

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

On the heels of the state's new Social Host Responsibility law and the recent arrests of underage drinkers — the town's drug and alcohol committee may sponsor an alcohol awareness program for Cohasset parents.

Edward G. McCann Jr., who served as Cohasset's interim town manager until Mark Haddad's arrival in 1997, and is a certified TIPS instructor, made a presentation on the TIPS program for parents to the drug & alcohol committee last night after the Mariner went to press.

In an interview Tuesday, McCann emphasized the focus of the program is to enable parents to bridge the communication gap that exists when talking about alcohol — while making sure they understand how their actions and attitudes affect their kids.

"As a parent, I think there is a very, very strong need for parents to make their children become aware of both the consequences as well as accountability factors for their actions," said McCann, the father of three. He said though peer pressure does influence a teenager's desire to

Reunion for descendants of Hingham settlers

Collier and Lincoln families to gather

By Carol Britton Meyer
CMEYER@CNC.COM

Children, grandchildren and even great-grandchildren of two of Hingham's earliest settlers from as far away as California will gather in town next weekend for their first-ever family reunion.

Alice and Ware Williams of Steamboat Lane will host the event for descendants of Thomas Collier and Samuel Lincoln and their families. Alice is related to both men, and Ware to Samuel Lincoln. One of their children has the first name of "Lincoln."

Collier came to Hingham in 1635 and Lincoln in 1637. The former was granted land on North Street near West Street and the latter lived on North Street.

According to Alice Ware, a number of Colliers moved to Hull in the 1650s.

But for the most part, both families lived in Hingham and Cohasset from the time they arrived in this country in the 17th century to the early 20th century, when they began dispersing.

The two families have close ties because James Collier, the father of a well-known Cohasset sea captain of Grassroots anti-handgun group sprouts in Cohasset

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Encouraged by a strong showing of interest at this past May's "Million Mom March" in Washington D.C. and at an informational forum last month, an anti-handgun group has sprung-up in Cohasset, ready to educate and inform area residents.

"We've really tapped a vein on the South Shore," said Highland Court resident Amyra O'Connell. She, along with Connie Afshar of South Main Street, say as many as 50 local residents have expressed interest in creating a South Shore chapter of the Newton-based organization 'Stop Handgun Violence.'

"We're not about taking away guns, but controlling guns," explained O'Connell.

The group hopes to educate interested area residents about gun violence, regulations, and legislation debated on Beacon Hill. They will focus specially on the local and national elections this fall, informing the public of the stances of those running for office. (See related story for local candidates' opinions.)

"Our short term goals are to effect change in gun laws," said O'Connell. "We'll start locally with the elections...try to give information to people and make people aware."

Afshar said the group plans on having another public forum in September, followed by a fundraiser in October.

"Basically our goals are education and mobilization around the upcoming elections, both locally and nationally," said O'Connell.

"Basically our goals are education and mobilization around the upcoming elections, both locally and nationally."

— Amyra O'Connell, Highland Court

She recognized Massachusetts as having some of the nation's toughest gun-control regulations, such as mandatory waiting periods and background checks, as well as giving local police departments jurisdiction over the issuing of gun permits. The group focused its first public meeting on general information about guns, gun permits and gun violence. Cohasset police detective Rick Grassie was a featured speaker and answered questions from the audience. O'Connell said the fact that surprised her the most was — a person is not limited to one gun per permit — but instead can have 400 guns or 4,000 guns if that person chooses. Therefore, O'Connell's concern is while it is possible to know how many people in Cohasset own guns (181 according to Grassie), it is impossible to know how many guns are in Cohasset.

Because records were poorly kept in the past, not all gun transactions were recorded prior to the mid 1990s. Currently, all transactions are immediately entered into a statewide database system upon purchase.

As a result, the group is urging for more accurate tracking of guns in the state and more gun-control legislation, instead of less laws and more strict enforcing of existing laws, as advocated by such organizations as the National Rifle Association.

"That is the argument from the other side...but it's so hard even now to check sometimes," O'Connell said about law enforcement efforts to perform routine background checks. "So it's hard for police to enforce the laws." She pointed out most police organizations support more gun-control.

O'Connell said the group favors a new proposal on Beacon Hill that would limit the amount of guns a person can buy to 12 guns a year, though admitting "personally I don't know why a person needs 12 guns a year."

Nationally, O'Connell hopes the rest of the country will follow Massachusetts' lead and toughen existing federal regulations. "Massachusetts should be applauded for its gun laws," she said, but added that because of less-stringent laws in surrounding states, Massachusetts' efforts are diluted. "You can go to another state and you don't need a gun permit or a background check.

Two-family home status on Arrowwood Street in limbo

Decision could be precedent setting

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

The zoning board is taking its time determining whether a house on Arrowwood Street can continue being used as a two-family dwelling because its decision could affect the status of other two-family homes in the neighborhood.

But resolution of the issue can't happen soon enough for homeowner Aaron Hassan who is losing income from not being able to rent out both units in his house at 15 Arrowwood.

Triggered by a complaint from a neighbor upset over the tenants' behavior, building inspector Robert Egan looked into the two-family zoning issue. He then notified Hassan last March that he was in violation of the zoning by-law if he continued to use the house as a two-family dwelling. Hassan then appealed the building inspector's decision to the zoning board, which conducted a hearing last month and deliberated on the issue Monday.

"I've already lost over $12,000 in rent," Hassan said.

In a letter to the board, Aaron's mother, Peg Hassan, said she found nothing in the zoning by-law that states a two-family dwelling must be used by other than related family members to maintain its two-family status.

She also pointed out that the premises were rented to non-family members for 20 years with no complaints.

"The essence of the deed issue is that it ran from the town to the individual and specifically allowed a two-family if the person chose to build it."

— AnsonWhealler, zoning board

The so-called veterans housing area off Pond Street that includes Arrowwood pre-dates the town's zoning laws and consists of about 40 lots that the town offered to veterans returning from World War II for $100 each. The deeds to those lots state that single- or two-family residences can be constructed there.

Board member Anson Whealler said he started working on the decision after last month's hearing but needed more direction from the board before continuing.

He said the provision in the deed carries more weight because it comes directly from the town through its selectmen to an individual.

"The essence of the deed issue is that it ran from the town to the individual and specifically allowed a two-family if the person chose to build it," Whealler said.

Hassan's father, Sam Hassan, who built the house, converted it in 1958 with the intention of using it as a two-family dwelling. Over the years several of the Hassan children and other relatives stayed there. In 1980 Sam Hassan sold the house to Aaron, who rented it out to non-family members.

Egan's decision was based on the fact that until 1980, solely family members used the apartment. It was Egan's understanding that if a non-conforming use lapses, then grandfathering is no longer valid and the use must follow the by-law. Although legal when the house was built, the Hassans' lot is too small for a two-family house under current by-laws. The two-family use is

Manager change

Selectmen unanimously approved the change of manager request made by the Atlantica restaurant for its liquor license. Erik Stenfors, the current head chef at Atlantica and original manager of the establishment, will replace Kurt Hochkeppel.

"He's back for a repeat performance," said Town Manager Mark Haddad.

Stenfors is a Scituate resident and is TIPS certified.

Preservation act

Much to his chagrin, Town Manager Mark Haddad was unable to make his planned presentation on the Community Preservation Act, thanks to a legislative maneuver by Governor Paul Cellucci last week that effectively killed the bill.

According to Haddad, Cellucci didn't agree with a provision in the act that would create a $20 fee for real estate transactions, that would help fund the act, and sent it back to the legislature with changes. However, the legislative session had ended, and the House was unable to secure the unanimous vote needed to come back into session and debate the changes, and the bill died.

"I was all set to make a big presentation for the board," lamented Haddad at Tuesday night's meeting.

The act would have allowed municipalities to tack on an additional 1/2 to 3 percent levy on residents tax bills, for the establishment of a town fund to purchase open space and recreational land, with the approval of Town Meeting. The state would then match the amount, paid for by the $20 transaction fee.

Haddad said with a 3 percent levy, the town would raise more than $450,000 annually, and when matched, would collect nearly a million dollars a year for land purchasing.

Culvert owner?

Still no one knows who is responsible for the West Corner Bridge — a culvert on Route 228 at the junction of Hull, Hingham and Cohasset. The board had asked Town Manager Mark Haddad to determine who owns the culvert. Haddad said Department of Public Works head Harold Litchfield is looking into the issue and will report back to Haddad shortly.

The Straits Pond Watershed Association last month reported that the bridge is need of repairs, citing two-foot holes in areas of the culvert.

D & A drug hotline

The Cohasset Drug and Alcohol Committee operates a Drug and Alcohol Information and Referral Hotline on Tuesdays. Persons needing help with a drug or alcohol problem may call 383-4120. All calls are confidential, and staffed by a trained drug and alcoholism counselor on Tuesdays between 6 and 10 p.m.. On other days and at other times callers may leave a message.

Half-time town planner hired

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Town Manager Mark Haddad announced to selectmen Tuesday night that Elizabeth Harrington will become Cohasset's first town planner as of September 5.

Harrington will be part-time, splitting her time between Cohasset and Hull where she will also serve as town planner.

"I'm really excited about this," said Haddad. "It's a nice way to share resources with the town of Hull, and because she couldn't have been a more qualified candidate."

Harrington is currently a principal planner for the city of Quincy, where she helped prepare neighborhood revitalization plans, assisted in the planning and implementation of a city-wide geographical map and build-out analysis, and in the oversight and planning of capital projects. She also researched and wrote a number of award-winning and successful grant applications for projects throughout the city.

She is a graduate of McGill University in Montreal and received her masters of business administration in 1995 from University of New Brunswick in New Brunswick, Canada.

Planning board chairman Al Moore also gave the hiring of Harrington high marks. "She has all the right credentials; a great personality. Everything says we hired the right person."

He said the hiring of an official town planner will add professionalism to the planning board.

"I've been pushing for a long time for the town to bring in a professional planner," said Moore, now in his third term on the board. "The demand for a planning board has been growing increasingly.

According to Moore, the expectations placed upon planning boards today is much different than when he first was elected. Bigger and more technically complicated projects come before the board, and along with them is tremendous legal pressure to make the correct ruling.

"When we get a big subdivision, it will be really helpful to have a professional look at it and identify some of the problems that need to be resolved," Moore explained. "Let's face it. We're living in a very litigious world these days. Folks bring their lawyer with them. We can't just say 'Oh gee, we goofed'...we need to be on an even playing field."

Moore also hopes Harrington's experience can be used to help Cohasset secure more state and federal grants. "Someone like Elizabeth has spent a number of years in the city of Quincy in a good position to sniff out these grants...There's got to be all kinds that we're not paying attention to."

Along with attending both towns' planning board meetings – that meet on alternate Wednesdays – she will be instrumental in developing a master growth plan for Hull and Cohasset. Moore said there have been attempts in the past to create a plan in Cohasset, but efforts have fallen short. "There's been some well-meaning attempts by citizens groups to conjure up some kind of buildup analysis, but if you're not going to get the data in its correct form from the get-go, everything else is meaningless."

Haddad told selectmen that once Harrington becomes familiar with the workings of the planning board, she will work closely with the town's growth and development committee. Selectman Michael Sullivan and Moore both think Harrington should become involved with the Cohasset Revitalization Committee – the new private organization set-up to analyze and create revitalization plans in the village and harbor areas.

The two towns will split Harrington's $42,000 salary, including benefits. She will officially be listed on Cohasset's payroll, and the town will be reimbursed by Hull.

Appropriations for the hiring were approved at the March town meeting.

Rocks on S. Main St.

Selectman Merle Brown continued his campaign to make town residents aware of the town's liability for rocks placed on the edge of the road — particularly South Main Street.

Some residents of the street have placed small boulders on the edge of their lawns to deter motorists from parking on or driving over the edge of their lawn. What people don't realize, said Brown, is that because the town's easement extends, in some cases, up to 10 feet onto a person's property, the town could be liable for any damage arising from damage due to the rocks.

Town counsel Paul DeRensis recently reported that even if the town did not place the stones on the edge of the road, it still is liable for any damage caused by them.

Attempts to remove the rocks have been met with resistance by property owners, many of whom simply replace the stones days later.

Greenbush news

Town Manager Mark Haddad reported the town's Section 106 historic impact hearings with the Army Corps of Engineers regarding the Grenbush right of way, are moving forward and that the project's draft memo of agreement has been received. The draft is currently being reviewed by Wendy Frontiero, the joint-consultant hired by Cohasset and Scituate for Greenbush.

The towns are embroiled in a battle with the MBTA over the restoration of the Greenbush commuter rail line. The tracks, which end in the Greenbush section of Scituate, travel through the heart of Cohasset and Hingham, as well as Weymouth and Braintree, and have not been used for nearly 40 years.

Ripley Road building once housed Hanlons, art center

Historic structure is for sale or lease

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

The blue, angled building on Ripley Road — which has housed Hallmark 100 real estate, the South Shore Art Center and vaudeville pioneers, the Hanlon Brothers, over the years — is looking for tenants.

The local Prudential Prime Properties/Hallmark 100 real estate agency owned by Chris Ford, had occupied the building since 1992. When Hunneman & Co. Coldwell Banker bought the Hallmark in May 1999, the office was consolidated with Hunneman's South Main Street office in Cohasset Village.

"I'm in the process of looking for new tenants," said Ford, who hasn't ruled out selling the building outright.

Ford renovated the two-story, 3,200 square-foot building at 103 Ripley Road, on the outskirts of Cohasset Village, after he purchased it from Cohasset Savings Bank. He said the space is quite flexible, with the ability to take down certain walls, without destabilizing the structure.

"It's a beautiful building with a lot of possibilities," he said.

The property is zoned for business, said Ford. So far, he has entertained leasing the space for a restaurant and a veterinarian, at "around $15 per square foot" — the going rental rate for office space in the area.

The Ripley Road property is assessed by the town at $224,500, but Ford — citing the current advantage sellers have in the real estate market — put a price tag of $450,000 on the building.

"I have houses selling for three and four times the assessed value," said Ford. "It's a supply and demand issue."

The history of the property demonstrates the its flexibility. According to town historian David Wadsworth, the structure was originally two separate buildings. The northern part of the building, directly across Smith Place from Carousel Antiques, was the former carpentry shop for the Hanlon Brothers, who were world-famous touring acrobats and performers in the late 19th century. The Hanlons' studio, which was razed in 1915, was located inside a seven-story building where Carousel Antiques now stands.

Also occupying the space was Hyland & McGraw Carpentry, which Wadsworth said, was a mainstay there through the first half of the 1900s. The South Shore Art Center called the building home from its inception in 1954 until it moved to its current location in 1985. According to Ford, the space was then the office of an interior design company owned by Phil Smith. A deli was also there at one time

Wadsworth's family owned the southern end of the building for a period of time at the turn of the century. "The building was in quite a deteriorated condition, you had to be careful," Wadsworth recalled. He said his family used it as storage for a while..

No one is sure when the two buildings were connected.

Ford said though the building has been modernized with full phone and Internet capacities, as well as air conditioning, "it's got the characteristics of an old building as well."

The fact the building is available for purchase at the same time as Post Office Square — an office/retail complex just down the street — should not worry residents about economic feasibility of the area, according to David Drinkwater, a partner with Coastal Countryside Properties, and president of the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce.

Drinkwater said people should not read anything into the fact both buildings are on the block.

"The village is a great location, I wish we had more space available," said Drinkwater. "There are several businesses thriving."

He said that though Ripley Road is on the edge of the village, it still is a high-visibility area due to its proximity to the post office, located across the street from 103 Ripley Road.

"For anyone to look at those locations would be a great opportunity for them," he said.

The building at 103 Ripley Road, across from the post office, that once housed the South Shore Art Center is now vacant. Owner Chris Ford says he may sell the building.

AROUND TOWN

GREETINGS!

Hi Everyone! It is so nice to have the sun shining once again. The downside of course is the very sticky weather but after all those damp days, who are we to complain? I have a lot of news to tell all of you this week, thank you to everyone for this! I even had someone toss a crumpled piece of paper with some graduation news out their car window as they drove by me on a recent walk. Hey, whatever works.

FANTASTIC SEASON

I will start this column with a huge Congratulations to the Cohasset Swimming and Dive Team on a fantastic summer! An Awards Night Celebration was held for all members on Friday, Aug. 4 at the high school gym, and great time was had by all. After the awards ceremony that gym was hopping to the music as a dance was held for all. The Cohasset Swimming and Dive team has more than 200 members this year and this season, this 1999 South Shore champion team won five out of six meets! How's that for impressive? This Sat. Aug 12, the South Shore Swim League is hosting the 2000 Swimming and Diving Championships at Wheaton College in Norton, Mass. to determine this year's champions. Let's Go, Cohasset! If any member of the team did not receive a trophy, please call Diane Shipp at 383-9198 and an arrangement will be made to get it to you. What a fantastic season all of you have had, keep up the good work and we will look forward to next summers accomplishments!

DEAN'S LIST

I have some great college news to let you all know about. The first is from the Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute in Troy, N.Y. Robert A. Stansell III, the son of Robert and Moira Stansell, has been named to the Dean's List for the Spring 2000 semester. Robert is currently a fourth year student in Rensselaer's School of Architecture. Robert will head to Rome, Italy to study in the fall. Great Job, Robert, enjoy the rest of the summer!

UMASS GRAD

Another graduate was reported from UMASS Amherst. Marisa A. Gallant of Flintlock Road was awarded a B.A. in ceremonies held on May 21 of this year. Good work, Marisa.

SEMESTER ABROAD

Middlebury College, in Middlebury, Vt., shared the news that junior, Samuel Geodecke, son of Jane and Peter Geodeke, spent the spring of 2000 studying at the University of Otago in New Zealand as part of Middlebury College's study abroad program. More than half of the college's junior class participated in study abroad and traveled to 39 countries to enter 87 different programs and universities. In order to be eligible for this program, students must be able to maintain an average of B- or better, must have proficiency at the advanced level in the language of the country and must provide a strong academic rationale for studying abroad. Quite an accomplishment, Samuel! Great Work.

BARBECUE SUPPER

The Beechwood Congregational Church is holding a Barbecue Supper on August 19, at 6:30 p.m. The church is located at 51 Church St. Dinner will include barbecue chicken, coleslaw, potato and macaroni salads, dessert and a beverage. Dessert choices are blueberry pie, blueberry sundae or blueberry shortcake! Ticket reservations must be made by calling 781-383-9131; the cost is $8 for adults and $4 for children. All are welcome and it sounds like a real nice time.

PRIZE WINNER

Justin Cobin, 4-1/2, of Cohasset won the drawing at Buttonwood Books & Toys for a Brio display board complete with attached tracks, valued at $150.

FAMILY REUNION

Tom and Jay Jay Healy of Cushing Road have certainly been busy enjoying a family-filled summer with their brood. Daughter Maureen, along with her husband Wally Corburn were here visiting from St. John U.S. Virgin Islands; daughter Susan and her husband Jim Benterov, were visiting from Pleasanton Calif. with sons, Jason and Evan; and daughter Kathy and her husband Dominic O'Donnell were here visiting from Stirlingshire, Scotland with their sons, Francis and Domenic. Along with their son Bob, from Cohasset and his children, Bryan and Samantha, a fun and busy time has been had by all.

EASTWICK, WHERE?

Well, I don't know how many of you were able to take in Scituate's Heritage Days last weekend, I wasn't able to attend but talked to many people who did and it received rave reviews. I was able to watch the piece done on QVC, filmed live in Scituate Harbor. Did anyone else hear the mistake made by host Bob? He made reference to the Jack Nicholson movie, "The Witches of Eastwick" that was filmed in "Scituate!?!?" I sent an email to him on Monday and received a wonderful reply and apology to the town of Cohasset from them.

ART EXHIBIT

The James Library and Center for the Arts presents "Boston Paintings" by local artists, which include Cohasset's very own JoAnne Chittick! The show will run from Sept. 8 to Oct. 3 and may be viewed during library hours Mon.-Fri. from 2-5 p.m., and Sat from 10 a.m.-1 p.m.There will be a reception for the artists on Friday, Sept. 29 from 6:30-8:30 p.m. and the public is invited. The library is located on 24 West St. in Norwell. Having seen many of JoAnne's pieces, this is something all should see! Fantastic news, JoAnne.

BIRTHDAY GIRLS

Happy Birthdays this week to two little girls who are very close to my heart.

Miss Kati Piepenbrink, daughter of Kirk and Keri (Pietrowski), celebrates her fifth birthday on Aug. 10. Kati is a very special little girl and I know that we are all very proud of you, Kati-Bug! Hope your day is wonderful.

Miss Melinda Dignam, another very special little girl, is celebrating her sixth birthday on Aug. 12. I know that your day will be filled with many happy and wonderful surprises Melinda, enjoy it and remember, keep on jumping!

SISTER ACT

The Deveney Sisters have done it again! This past week, the CHS stage was hopping to tunes from all the kids favorite musical groups in a play called, "Cinderella Smith" written by Beth Deveney. What a wonderful and enjoyable way to retell a story that has been around for ages. The children in this play were very comfortable on stage and had obviously put in many hours of hard work to put this all together. Beth, Grace and Sarah, as well as the staff and children all deserve a huge round of applause, this play was fantastic! For more about the Deveneys see Max inside this week's Cohasset Mariner!

That's all the news from here this week. I hope that everyone enjoys the upcoming one and remember to send in all your news to jenpiep@yahoo.com or 622 CJC Highway.

Girl Scout featured on thin mints cookie box

Is granddaughter of Beechwood pastor

By Shanley Stern
5STERN@CNC.COM

When ordinary people buy the popular Girl Scout cookie, thin mints, chances are they have no idea there is an in-depth competition that goes into choosing which scouts will be featured on the front and back of the box.

Out of the 200 girls who signed up to be on the box, 11-year-old Megan Roberts — granddaughter of Robert Branson pastor of the Beechwood Congregational Church — never dreamed she would be the only one from her troop chosen.

The Girl Scouts targeted the Kansas area for scouts to be featured in the box. Megan's entire troop of 12 were interviewed. During the interview process, each girl was asked what badge they liked earning the best. For Megan, there was no contest.

"I told them I liked earning a badge with my grandma from Italy," she said. "We talked about her life and hobbies."

The next thing she knew, she was asked to come for a three-hour photo session with nine other girls for the back cover slot.

The pictures change every five-to-six years, so Megan can be seen nationwide in her helmet, all ready to "zipline" her way into every thin mint lover's home.

Megan described "ziplining," her favorite activity, as climbing into a harness that is attached to an overhead cable and pulley which then zips the scout through the air.

Incorporated in 1912, Girl Scouts of America is dedicated to helping girls from all over the world develop and nourish their skills. The badge system rewards the girls with a symbol of their accomplishments that they can sew onto their uniforms.

Each year the number of activities available for a scout to earn a badge grows. Today there is everything from the newly innovated online badge to a pet care or science badge, according to the official Girl Scouts of America website.

A girl has the opportunity be a part of the organization from the early age of five, as a Daisy, and to age 18 as a Girl Scout.

Megan, a Kansas native, began her scouting days in the first grade with a troop out of Shawnee, Kan. The group has 12 girls who participate in everything from day camps, cook-outs, pottery and craft making to cooking.

Although Megan has recently moved to a neighboring town, she still plans to stay very involved in Girl Scouts at her new school, Broken Arrow Elementary in Lenexa, Kan.

Megan is visiting her grandparents, Robert and Joan Branson, who live in Rockland.

That's Megan Roberts, 11, at the top of the rope ladder. She's the granddaughter of Branson Roberts, pastor at the Beechwood Congregational Church.

Celtic and classical music at Glastonbury Abbey

Hingham Symphony presents the first of its "Connecting the Arts" series on Saturday, Aug. 26 at 4:30 p.m., on the lawn at Glastonbury Abbey, featuring an enchanting combination of classical and Celtic music. Seamus Connolly, who won the Dash National Fiddle Championship an unprecedented ten times, will be joined by fiddler Laurel Martin, to present traditional and rousing arrangements of Irish slow airs, reels, and set dances, as well as some of Ireland's most revered classical compositions. Connolly is director of the Irish Studies Program at Boston College, and he and Martin teach traditional Irish fiddle together at Boston College. Hingham Symphony musicians, oboist Andrew Price, soprano Karyl Ryczek and pianist Wayman Chin, will perform a selection of classical and popular music, including half of Copland's song cycle, "Twelve Poems by Emily Dickinson." Bring your own blanket or beach chair; light refreshments will be available. Tickets ($10 adults, $5 age 18 and under) are available at Hingham Public Library, the Abbey Bookstore, at the gate, or by calling 740-5694. Glastonbury Abbey is located on Rte 228, just north of Rte 3A. In case of rain, the concert will be held at the Greek Orthodox Church, 811 Jerusalem Road, Cohasset.

Grading the Legislature

It's taken some time for the dust to settle after the marathon of deadline legislating that ended at midnight July 31, but the record of the Legislature's year is now visible.

All things are relative, and compared to last year, when an impasse between House Speaker Tom Finneran and Senate President Tom Birmingham delayed the budget by five months and left important initiatives rubbed, this year's session was highly productive.

The record is less satisfying compared to the response we'd have liked to see to persistent problems facing the state. By this measure, the Legislature's year can be seen as a series of half-steps in the right direction.

The Legislature approved the Community Preservation Act, providing a tool cities and towns can use for protecting open space, but weakened it by spiking a local-option tax on real estate transfers.

It increased spending on education even as the commitments written into the Education Reform Act of 1993 were expiring, but it ignored the need to remedy inequities in the formula for distributing education aid.

It took a small bite out of a big problem, providing limited prescription drug benefits for some seniors.

It made some common-sense changes in the School Building Assistance program, most of them suggested by the Cellucci Administration, but did nothing to increase the state's support for school projects.

It adopted a watered-down Patients' Bill of Rights.

It made some controversial changes in the rules governing special education, without addressing the more serious issue of funding special education.

It approved a compromise abortion clinic access bill, providing a buffer between patients and protesters that is more a bubble than a wall.

It approved a financing package for a new Fenway Park that is drawing more jeers than cheers and which may yet be rejected by the Boston City Council or the Red Sox.

Thanks to a booming economy, the Legislature was able to pour $500 million in surplus funds into the potholes in the Big Dig financing plan while still funding, though in fits and starts, road and bridge repairs in the rest of the state.

It is, all told, a bakery shelf of half-loaves. But at least there was movement on health care, on sprawl, on special education. However weakened by compromise, these initiatives are the fruit on years of advocacy.

These accomplishments demonstrate that Finneran and Birmingham, who are similar in style but different in ideology, have learned how to compromise with each other. They made their deals, and this year they made them in time — just barely — for the Legislature to adjourn its formal sessions on schedule.

Their management of the legislative process, previously abysmal, now earns a grade of "poor." Most of these compromises were forged in the dark, at the last minute, by Finneran, Birmingham and a handful of lieutenants. Most rank-and-file legislators were treated like State House furniture. The budget was again loaded down with complicated initiatives that should have been handled separately.

Again this year, most of the action happened at the eleventh hour. The Fenway Park legislation, for instance, was delivered Friday morning and voted into law Saturday night, with almost no opportunity for legislators to study it or the public to voice their opinions. When the clock struck midnight, the House still hadn't managed to act on a desperately needed pay raise for human services workers or consider overriding Gov. Cellucci's veto of a bill returning power over cell phone tower siting decisions to local boards.

Whether these failures were by happenstance or deliberate action isn't clear, but either interpretation reflects poorly on Finneran and Birmingham. A legislative body ought to be able to deliberate important matters openly and get its business done on time. Legislative inefficiency just puts more power into the hands of the leadership, which is probably why it is allowed to continue.

All in all, we're pleased that the Legislature got some things done this year. We're not at all pleased with the way they did it.

Quality of life

TO THE EDITOR:

Let me see if I get this straight; in our little town of Cohasset, one family is tidying up, cutting and pruning, planting and painting, restoring and renovating public property, at their own expense, thereby saving the taxpayers money, improving our quality of life, and there are actually Cohassetites who object? Gulf not gulph

TO THE EDITOR:

References to the Gulf River in your columns in recent weeks spell the name of the river, rather quaintly, "Gulph" — signifying, I suppose, that your writers know something about Cohasset history the rest of us don't.

Please let it be known there is no basis in historical fact for this presumably antiquated spelling of the name. It is and always has been — from the earliest references to be found in Bigelow's "Narrative History of Cohasset" (the ultimate authority in such matters) — spelled "Gulf."

In fact, if you really go back, to the 17th century, you find the river was called "Coneyhasset (and variations thereof). Where the "Gulf" came in is still not clear, except that was what early maps labeled the widest part of the river just above the Mill Dam (now the Border Street bridge.) Presumably, "Gulf" was a lot easier to handle colloquially than "Conahasset" (or whatever).

Perpetuating the "Gulph" myth is harmless enough, but to those who bother about such things it sounds cutesy and slightly cornball — like ye "Olde" Salt House and Lightkeepers "Cottage" — and is somewhat demeaning.

Lets drown "Gulph" in the Gulf.

John F. Hartshone

Thank you Mr. Roy

TO THE EDITOR:

I am writing this letter in support of the work that Mr. Peter Roy has done for the town of Cohasset.

Mr. Roy, as some have suggested, is not a newcomer to Cohasset. He has lived here in excess of 25 years. I assume that he moved to this town for the same reasons that many of us moved to Cohasset, its natural charm, its beauty and the caliber of the people that choose to call Cohasset their home.

Cohasset is a small town and anyone that has attended any of the recent town meetings is well aware that, as a town, we have had many budget problems. Our expenses will continue to increase as we have several large expenditures on our plate such as installing town sewer, the new Osgood School, the renovations to the Deer Hill School and the renovations to the Junior/Senior High School.

We, the residents of Cohasset, have been very fortunate to enjoy and benefit from a healthy appreciation in property values in our town. Cohasset must maintain its character for people to continue to want to live here.

Mr. Roy's donations to repair and maintain the harbor area, as well as the flower boxes, are a positive factor in residents being able to enjoy the beauty of our harbor. The real estate prices of the homes in Cohasset will continue to benefit from our waterfront area being repaired and maintained.

Mr. Roy has been a generous supporter of many of our town assets. I am sure that many town residents are not aware but Mr. Roy has been a generous financial supporter of the Cohasset Public Schools, the South Shore Community Center, The South Shore Art Center, the Art Festival on the Common, The Relay for Life — Walk for Cancer and the Paul Pratt Memorial Library as well as other charities and community based organizations. I think that we are very fortunate to have a private citizen, who loves the town that he lives in, be willing ,out of his own generosity, to pick up the expenses for much needed town repairs and maintenance. Perhaps what we should be saying to Mr. Roy is thank you!

VOTES

S 2027 Charter School expansion. The bill would increase the number of charter schools operating in the state. The vote is whether to accept a compromise version of the bill authored jointly by the House and Senate. It passed 20 to 17 and is awaiting final approval.	N
S 2269 - Red Sox ballpark financing bill. Passed 28 to 8. The bill would authorize the state to spend $100 million on "infrastructure improvements" in the neighborhood around a new Fenway park. It also allows the city of Boston to spend $213 million to help the Red Sox buy land for the new stadium, and to build a new ballpark parking garage. It also allows the city to use hotel taxes, game-day parking fees, a ticket tax, meals and sales taxes, and a luxury box tax to repay much of that $213 million investment. The "yes" vote in the Senate sent the bill to the governor's desk for a final approval.	N
S 2211 - Lowell Housing project bill. Passed 35 to 3. The bill will allow the city of Lowell to tear down an affordable housing complex, relocate the residents, and replace it with a "mixed use" complex that will bring both poor and more middle-class tenants. It is now waiting for the governor's final approval.	Y
S 2238 - Racial Profiling bill. Passed 35 to 2. The bill orders police officers to start keeping records on the ethnicity and gender of each person they issue a traffic ticket. Proponents said the bill is needed to stop white police officers from harassing black and Hispanic motorists. It is now on the governor's desk.	Y
H 5865 - Veto override on the MBTA bond bill. The vote is whether or not to override Gov. Paul Cellucci's veto of a program that would allow suburban communities to set up locally-run transportation programs for the elderly and disabled. The bill would allow towns paying an annual assessment to the Mass Bay Transportation Authority, but not receiving services from the authority's RIDE program, to get some of their money back if they used it to set up a similar service. A yes vote is to override the veto of the program. A no vote is to sustain the governor's veto. The override passed 35 to 4.	Y
H 5300 - Veto override on the Clean Elections Law. House and Senate lawmakers added a section to the state budget that would delay implementation of a campaign finance reform law until next year. Cellucci vetoed the delay, saying the law should go into place as soon as possible. The vote is whether to override that veto and delay the law. The override passed 28 to 11.	N

Reading program

Guest story teller and artist, Michael Astley, will read an original story and illustrate it as he tells his tale on Thursday, Aug. 17 at 1 p.m. This will be followed by a "Make Your Own Sundae" party for all children who have participated in the summer reading program.

It's still not too late to join the fun and bring in your reading logs for interesting prizes like deep sea creature key chains or 3-D rainbow glasses. Call the Paul Pratt Memorial Librarian, Suzanne Terry, at 383-1348 for more information.

Artist of the Month

Andrew T.L Anderson-Bell, a member of the South Shore Art Center in Cohasset and numerous other art associations from Cambridge to Rockport, is this month's artist on display at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library gallery. Anderson-Bell's show began in July and continues until the end of August.

Anderson-Bell has worked with pastels to depict familiar landscape scenes from his home turf of Ipswich to the exploration of the islands and beaches of Penobscot Bay in Maine.

In his artist statement, Anderson-Bell said he attempts to "capture the feel of weather and nature's change in mood." There is a strong sense of atmosphere created by the way Anderson-Bell mixes the gentle lapping of waves with the tumultuous power of the sea.

Anderson-Bell graduated with a Bachelor of Arts from Colby College, Waterville, Maine, in 1987 then continued at Rhode Island School of Design completing a Bachelor of Fine Arts and Graphic Arts in 1994.

Anderson-Bell has had several exhibitions from Concord to Newburyport. Honors and awards have come to him at the many juried shows at the Sargent Gallery in Newburyport.

Visit the beautiful pastels at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library through August.

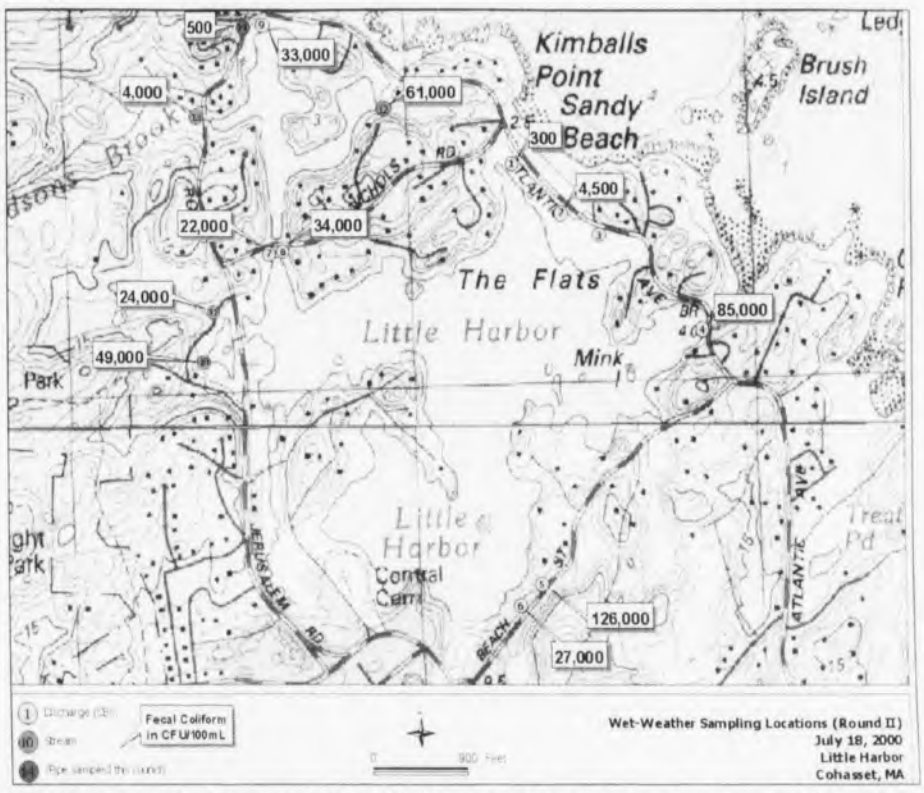
HEALTH NOTES

'Disturbing' test results from Little Harbor

By Stephen N. Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

One of the deficiencies which the DEP noted in the Town's Little Harbor Study, finished in 1999, was that the rainy weather water quality testing of Little Harbor was incomplete and inadequate. First, wet weather water testing of Little Harbor was done only once rather than two times as required by the town. Second, analysis of the test data was flawed, in that the range of coliform readings was inadequate to characterize the condition of the water body. Accordingly, the Town required the contractor to retest Little Harbor water quality during a rain event, and analyze the samples using correct procedures. These test results, taken from sampling on July 18, were received by the Board of Health last weekend, and they are very disturbing.

In dry weather poorly operating septics perform well enough, gradually processing wastes. It is only when rain events cause water to leak into cesspools or leaky septic systems that we have a problem.



The illustration shows the locations within Little Harbor where water quality samples were taken, and the numbers show the fecal coliform values obtained in units of 'colonies per hundred milliliters'.

The illustration shows the locations within Little Harbor where water quality samples were taken, and the numbers show the fecal coliform values obtained in units of 'colonies per hundred milliliters'. Notice that there are no numbers below 300. Drinking water standards are 5, shellfish standards are 14, and swimming standards are 200. When a septic system has failed it is common to see levels on the ground as high as 5-6000. Accordingly, some of the readings, for a short time between 4 and 5 p.m., were similar to those found in an active sewer.

Fortunately, these high values of pollution are usually quickly diluted by additional rain and the normal flushing action of a tidal estuary. However, in the case of the July 18 event, the rain stopped, and the pollution probably remained in Little Harbor until it was swept out by the tide a few hours later. The ebb was in full flow during the rain event which lasted only about an hour.

The source of about half of this pollution is surface water: animal droppings, road kill, rotting vegetation, etc. The balance comes from the underground effluent plumes of failed or poorly operating septic systems near the water body.

An unusually wet spring has prompted a series of events like the July 18 storm when about 1.5-to-2 inches fell in an hour. This summer has been far different from 1999 when there was much dry weather when most of the data from Little Harbor was taken. In dry weather poorly operating septics perform well enough, gradually processing wastes. It is only when rain events cause water to leak into cesspools or leaky septic systems that we have a problem. In this case, the water travels underground undiluted and surfaces in weeps or breakouts, wet patches of ground where it can mix with other surface water and flow into our ponds, rivers streams and estuaries.

The Town has an active program of storm-water management supported by a grant from the State's Executive Office of Environmental Affairs, and we are doing as much as we can to reduce the effects of storm water on our roads, parking lots, parks and fields. However, it is clear that without recognition and action by our citizens, pollution events in our Town such as that in July will become ever more frequent. Contact the Board of Health and find out what you can do.

 Issued Monthly by the Cohasset Board of Health

Effluent plume: An underground stream of water whose boundary flow is laminar and therefore retains its composition for long distances of underground travel. When the plume leaves the ground typically in a 'breakout', it retains most of the composition of its origin.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Lowest bidder

TO THE EDITOR:

If one wanted advice on managing a million dollar investment portfolio, or needed eye or gonad surgery, or simply wanted another face lift, one would surely pick a professional service provider that seemed most likely to deliver advice resulting in long term satisfaction. The most important criteria would be expected quality of service, and would overshadow consideration of the price for the services.

Why then, the foolish notion that engineering consulting should be purchased from the lowest bidder? Surely the long term satisfaction (or lack of it), and ultimate operating cost resulting from the consultants advice is of far greater import than the relatively minor differences between quoted prices for the initial consulting. Granted, highest quote doesn't necessarily bring best results, nor lowest price the worst results. But the experience and competence of the bidders as far as can be judged from the information available, should be the deciding factors in choosing a consultant.

It's the ultimate bottom line that counts ...the long term cost and efficacy of the project ...that counts, not some paltry difference between consultants fees.

The critics of Town Manager Mark Haddad's choice of consultants should take a less narrow view. The nation is littered with public works that demonstrate the old adage: "penny wise, pound foolish"!

Barking dog

TO THE EDITOR:

We returned home Sunday night to find the following anonymous note had been placed in our mailbox:

"Hi. Please do not leave the dog outside when you are away from the house. You may not realize it, but he barks incessantly (underlined) and disturbs the entire neighborhood. Thank you very much."

As we have no way of responding directly to the author, I hope you will publish this letter in hopes he or she will read it.

Our 16-year-old cairn terrier, who had been with us while we were away, is mostly blind, mostly deaf, and gave up barking for lack of energy at least a year ago. When we showed her your letter (under a magnifying glass), she felt rejuvenated to think someone would accuse her — all of 17 pounds — of abusing the serenity of the neighborhood. What is especially extraordinary is that anyone in this neighborhood could actually hear the bark of a dog, who isn't even here, over the rock drilling, dynamiting, and squealing of heavy construction equipment that commences at 7:30 each morning.

We have lived at the same address for 18 years and up to now no one has had reason to accuse us of leaving our dog unattended, or to accuse our dog of barking "incessantly." Given that, it would appear you are hearing some other dog. We do have new neighbors who have moved in next door. They have a pleasant, friendly golden and they have been taking care of the dog of a friend who has been helping them move and get settled in their new home. I do not plan to give them your letter as I feel the tone of it is decidedly unwelcoming.

Miss Manners would probably suggest that you walk by the house next door, introduce yourself, and welcome the new couple to the neighborhood. Then you could raise the issue of barking dogs face-to-face. Surely you will be a lot closer to solving the problem you perceive as disturbing the neighborhood than sending an anonymous letter to the wrong family.

Missing names sought for vets' memorial

Below is a list of names that the Memorial Overseers Committee (with the help of Austin Ahearn) has come up with. This list is the names of those who served in the military from Aug. 14, 1945 to Dec. 31, 1946, from Cohasset. These names will be added to the war memorial at Veterans Memorial Park. At the same time the inscription at the top of the memorial will be changed to reflect the end of the Second World War to be Dec. 31, 1946. Also, there is a list of those who served from Dec. 7, 1941 to Aug. 14, 1945, who were missed when the memorial was first put up.

The committee would like to hear from anyone who might know of anyone else the committee missed. At that time these names will be added. The requirement to have a person's name on the memorial is: the person has to have lived in Cohasset at their time of going into the service.

Call the selectmen's office at 383-4105 or Austin Ahearn at 383-0529 if you know of anyone the committee may have missed.

Fistfights over Nomar's bat

One of these days the Red Sox are going to win the World Series, and I hope I'm in Outer Mongolia at the time.

Think of its impact on the sports memorabilia dodge.

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

Fistfights will break out over the bat that Nomar used to drive in the winning run in the last of the ninth. In a few years, you can sell it for a million dollars. By then, that'll be enough to buy you a semester of education at Harvard.

The ball that Nomar knocked off the wall will be fought for by small boys, and the winner will stash it away for a few years and then sell it for a million dollars, enough to buy the butler's cottage on an estate in Cohasset.

The piece of the left-field wall where the ball struck will be removed under cover of darkness and auctioned off by Sotheby's for another million once the statute of limitations for grand larceny has expired.

And you don't really have to be a sporting figure to rack up big bucks from the souvenir crowd.

And the Red Sox No. 5 shirts that Nomar wore . . . I say "shirts" with an S because he'll wear a new one every inning for just such an occasion . . . they'll be scaled in price until you get a million for the one worn in the ninth inning.

I tell you, it's coming to that, what with the 2x2-foot square piece of the Boston Garden's parquet floor, the exact spot where Larry Bird stole the ball and turned defeat into victory in Game Five of the 1987 NBA Eastern Conference finals, going on the auction block.

And they've also identified the spot from which Bill Russell took off to block a St. Louis Hawks' shot in the 1957 finals. Now if they can find the spot where John Havlicek swiped that inbound pass in 1963 . . .

It seems like anything or anyone who has the most tenuous connection with sports is fair game for the collectors — like Ty Cobb's false teeth, $7,475 at auction, and Bill Veeck's wooden leg, which was expected to go for $15,000, also at auction.

The basketball that Wilt Chamberlain used to score his record 99th and 100th points with 46 seconds remaining in an NBA game was sold for $551,841 to a collector, only to find out it may not be that ball at all.

Seems the kid who ran off with the ball and kept it for 38 years may have taken the wrong ball since the right ball was taken out of the game after the 100th point and given to Wilt, and a new one was substituted for the last 46 seconds.

And you don't really have to be a sporting figure to rack up big bucks from the souvenir crowd.

The beaded dress that Marilyn Monroe poured herself into to sing "Happy Birthday, Mr. President" at Jack Kennedy's birthday party in Madison Square Garden was sold for $1,267,500 — empty, of course.

What will Monica's blue dress be worth 20 years down the road?

Before cleaning? A million dollars? Don't laugh. After cleaning, it will probably be marked down.

A carbine that was used at the Battle of the Little Big Horn was sold the other day for $684,500 to a collector, and it wasn't even used by one of Custer's men. It was used by an Indian to fire on Major Reno's men.

Gosh, if I'd only mailed home that GI-issue Reising submachine gun piece-by-piece like some of the guys did, I'd be able to take that month's vacation in Tahiti or at least a week on the Vineyard after the Clintons have gone home.

Republican cookout is August 27

Gourmet cooks Julie Guild, Marge Smith and Edythe Ford will be assisted by renowned grill masters Mark Baker, Bill Grimm, Sam Pease, Peter Guild and Christy Mihos at the annual Cohasset GOP cookout to be held 4 - 7 p.m. at the seaside home of Ted and Julie Guild, 365 Jerusalem Road, Cohasset, on Sunday, Aug. 27.

Reports from Beacon Hill will be made by Sen. Bob Hedlund, GOP House Leader Francis Marini of Hansen and Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray of Cohasset.

Another highlight will be a tribute to Molly Kochkeppel, who recently announced she was retiring from several decades of service at the Patriot Ledger. She will be honored for assisting a myriad of good causes through her expert reporting.

Open to the public from counties of Norfolk, Plymouth, Bristol and Barnstable, reservations are requested and can be made by calling Janet Fogarty (383-3036), Polly Logan (383-0031), Julie Guild (383-6443), Edythe Ford (383-1648).

Reunion for descendants of Hingham settlers

the same name, married Sally Lincoln, who is six generations removed from Samuel Lincoln. The father was born seven generations after Thomas Collier.

The Wares expect about 60 people to attend the reunion.

It was the couple's trip to Hingham, England with a group of other Hingham, Mass., residents last year that sparked the idea for the get-together.

"It was a marvelous experience," said Alice Ware. "They made us feel so welcome. It gave us a wonderful feeling."

When they visited England to celebrate "The American Connection" from the earliest settlers to the present day, the Wares brought along two photographs of works painted by their son, Peter, to present as a gift to St. Andrew's Church.

One was a painting of James Collier's ship. The other depicted a snow scene of Old Ship Church circa 1850 (see related sidebar).

The event was planned to raise funds for a major millennium project to restore the 14th-century Hingham, England, church, where Samuel Lincoln was baptized during the 1600s.

"Everything snowballed from there," Ware said.

She already knew of some relatives living in Hingham and Cohasset, and word of mouth about the upcoming reunion soon got around.
